Thallium-201 and Technetium-99m-Pyrophosphate Myocardial Imaging in the Coronary Care Unit F.J.T Wackers, 2012-12-06 Noninvasive visualization of myocardial infarction using radionuclides dates back over eighteen years. Edward A. Carr and William H. Beierwaltes were first to report (1962) successful external imaging of myocardial infarcts in dogs and in man using an Anger scintillation camera. They demonstrated that after intravenous administration of <sup>86</sup>Rb or <sup>131</sup>I ICS an infarct was visualized as a cold spot, while <sup>203</sup>Hg-labeled-chlormeridin resulted in a hot-spot image of the infarct. Since then, there have been major developmental improvements in available radionuclides, scintillation cameras and computer processing capabilities. In particular, the development of mobile gamma cameras opened the possibility to obtain high quality images even at the bedside of critically ill patients. Since the development in 1974 of a new radiopharmaceutical, <sup>201</sup>Tl and the application of <sup>99m</sup>Tc-pyrophosphate for myocardial imaging, these imaging agents are widely used for the detection of acute myocardial infarction. However, for practical application, frequently there appears to be uncertainty or even confusion concerning the relative merits of each method.

Violence, permission, sex, the afterlife are all here, but not in the usual way. Who will actually be on the Starship Enterprise? How many sentient beings are there in the universe? What is a soul, really? What does holy actually mean? These are a few of the issues that are dealt with through the stories.
