Resources, Tariffs, and Trade James R. Williams,1976 From the back cover: Has the Canadian tariff really benefited Ontario?....Evidence is now presented in this book that the tariff, despite its intention, has not succeeded in encouraging the growth of secondary manufacturing in Ontario - or in Canada as a whole. Suprisingly, the tariff may have encouraged agricultural production in Ontario, compared with other provinces, but the amount of processing and manufacturing in the province, according to this study, has been reduced below the level possible with free trade. Professor Williams suggests that the Canadian tariff has raised the cost of end-product processing, relative to earlier stages of processing by shifting production to commodities using resources that are scarce in Canada. He maintains that free trade would encourage final processing, because intermediate products would be obtained at world prices and more abundant Canadian resources would be used.
