AR-15 Shooting Guide For Beginners Dr Sandra White,2022-11-02 The appeal of the AR-15 is the result of the rifle's neat features. It offers flexibility that makes it an instant favorite of newbies. In the same manner, veterans also love it for its many uses. They can use it for hunting small animals. They can fire it in the range. They can equip themselves with the rifle for defending their homes. These and many other factors are the reasons why the AR-15 became America's rifle. Since there are four different positions you can assume when firing your, your shooting stance will likely vary. However, there are basics in gripping and holding your rifle that remain the same. Upon assuming your position, put your firing hand high on the pistol grip. Put your thumb over the three fingers on the grip. You want your thumb wrapping around the three fingers. Doing this will give you a firmer grip on your rifle. This, in turn, will keep you from making any unnecessary movements, particularly with your trigger finger. As for your non-firing hand, wrap it around the handguard. You want your fingers to curl naturally around the fore-end. But make sure not to hold it too tight. Next, position the butt of your rifle's stock against your body. You want to place the stock on your shoulder pocket. This position helps increase your accuracy while allowing faster recovery after firing. If you do not know where your shoulder pocket is, hold your shooting arm straight and out. Take your other hand and look for the high point of your collarbone's front part. Slide your hand outwards toward the direction of your shoulder around the collarbone. When you notice your fingers slip down and inward, it means you already located your shoulder pocket. If you wish to enjoy more mobility while firing, assume the standing position. If you want to keep a lower profile, the kneeling and sitting positions are your best bets. But if you want optimum stability at the lowest possible point, go for the prone position. To increase your accuracy, you need to use the position that is appropriate for the situation. Are you taking your rifle for some hunting? Then an erect standing position will suit you best. But remember that people have different body types. What is comfortable for others may cause discomfort to you. Thus, learn to make some adjustments until you achieve a comfortable firing position.
