Public Sector Discount Rates John Creedy,Hemant Passi,2017 Abstract: This article describes alternative approaches to the public sector discount rate and explains the assumptions involved. Time-varying rates are also considered. The social opportunity cost of capital (SOC) is the rate of return that could be earned on the 'next best alternative'. The social rate of time preference (SRTP) is the rate of return required in order to divert resources to a public investment. Only in an 'ideal' market are these two rates brought into alignment in equilibrium. Essentially the discount rate reflects how the government values the future when making decisions on behalf of society: value judgements are unavoidable.
