Cockpit Displays: Test and Evaluation Richard L. Newman,Kevin W. Greeley,2017-03-02 Cockpit Displays is an in-depth examination of the design rationales, test philosophy and test procedures for cockpit systems. Whilst its main emphasis is on cockpit displays, it also includes an important discussion of flight management systems and mission computers. Areas covered include: the cockpit design process, test techniques for flight displays and equipment, and situation awareness testing. Comparing civil and military requirements, it is an important analysis of the lessons learned from test and evaluation and will be of interest to cockpit systems design engineering staff at major airframe manufacturers, procurement executives and program managers at military aircraft program offices and flight test engineers and test pilots.

Head-Up Displays: Designing the Way Ahead Richard L. Newman,2017-03-02 This is a thorough description of this increasingly important technology, starting from the development of head-up displays (HUDs), particularly specifications and standards and operational problems associated with HUD use. HUD involvement in spatial disorientation and its use in recognizing and recovering from unusual attitudes is discussed. The book summarizes the design criteria including hardware, software, interface and display criteria. It goes on to outline flight tasks to be used for evaluating HUDs and discusses the impact of HUDs on flight training. Recent work indicates that a HUD may allow a significant reduction in the time required to train a pilot on a particular aircraft, even considering non-HUD-related tasks. The author concludes with a review of unresolved HUD issues and recommendations for further research and provides an impressive bibliography, glossary and index. Within the military aviation sector the book will be of use to industry, research agencies, test pilot schools and air force training establishments. In the civil area regulatory authorities, airlines and industry will also have an increasing interest.

Aircraft Display Systems Malcolm Jukes,2004 Display systems are the vital indicators that monitor the various avionics, environmental, and electronic systems that keep aircraft in the air. Aircraft Display Systems introduces the reader to the means by which information is presented to the crew, enabling them to carry out their tasks safely and successfully. Aircraft Display Systems provides an assessment of the current and potential future information needs in civil and military flight decks. It also offers the reader an appreciation of the technologies available to the display engineer in order to provide solutions that meet those needs. This volume will be an invaluable source of information to all those involved in aircraft design, build, testing, and investigation. Copublished with Professional Engineering Publishing. New Flight Display Formats ,1995 Electro-mechanical (E-M) instruments, which have been associated with aircraft cockpits since World War I, are rapidly being replaced by electro-optical instruments in both military and civilian aircraft. As the conversion continues, questions arise as to the impact of these displays on the pilot's efficiency. One of the most important issues of the modern cockpit centers around the pilot-computer interface - that is, are the display's graphic formats, which have replaced the tried and true E-M instruments, intuitive? This paper describes three new ways to present flight information to the pilot on head down and head up displays and discusses research results geared toward answering this question.

Panoramic, Large-Screen, 3-D Flight Display System Design National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA),2018-07-27 The report documents and summarizes the results of the required evaluations specified in the SOW and the design specifications for the selected display system hardware. Also included are the proposed development plan and schedule as well as the estimated rough order of magnitude (ROM) cost to design, fabricate, and demonstrate a flyable prototype research flight display system. The thrust of the effort was development of a complete understanding of the user/system requirements for a panoramic, collimated, 3-D flyable avionic display system and the translation of the requirements into an acceptable system design for fabrication and demonstration of a prototype display in the early 1997 time frame. Eleven display system design concepts were presented to NASA LaRC during the program, one of which was down-selected to a preferred display system concept. A set of preliminary display requirements was formulated. The state of the art in image source technology, 3-D methods, collimation methods, and interaction methods for a panoramic, 3-D flight display system were reviewed in depth and evaluated. Display technology improvements and risk reductions associated with maturity of the technologies for the preferred display system design concept were identified. Flying the Boeing 787 Gib Vogel,2013-08-31 Since its first flight on 15 December 2009, the Boeing 787 'Dreamliner' has been the most sophisticated airliner in the world. It uses many advanced new technologies to offer unprecedented levels of performance with minimal impact on the environment. Flying the Boeing 787 gives a pilot's eye view of what it is like to fly this remarkable machine. It takes the reader on a trip from Tokyo to Los Angeles as the flight crew see it, from pre-flight planning, through all the phases of the flight to shut-down at the parking stand many thousands of miles from the departure point. Lavishly illustrated with specially taken photographs of the B787's controls and instruments, this book will be of interest not just to commercial pilots, but to all aviation enthusiasts: it gives an insight into a world normally hidden for the flying public, at the technical and operational cutting edge of commercial flying. Primary Flight Displays in the T-38C: When Do Differences Among Displays Become Inconsistencies ,2003 In the 1980s the US military settled on counterpointers, or dials, as the standard gauge for display of airspeed and altitude in a head-up display (HUD). This format is now making its way into production aircraft, one of which is the T-38C, a US Air Force (USAF) fighter jet trainer. The T-38C is unique in possessing three primary flight displays: a head-down primary flight display (PFD) suite, a HUD in Military Standard (MIL-STD) emulation mode, and the same HUD in F-16 emulation mode. Differences among these displays include color, scale, and gauge format (e.g., tapes vs. dials). A study was conducted as part of the Air Force's primary flight display endorsement process to determine if differences among these displays represent inconsistencies that might have practical impact on pilot performance, situation awareness, or workload. Sixteen T-38 pilots flew maneuvers designed to test spatial orientation and trend perception. Maneuvers were flown with each PFD alone and in two transition conditions: from the MIL-STD HUD to the HDD, and from the F-16 HUD to the HDD. Flight performance data were collected and pilots also rated situation awareness (SA) and workload. Three senior USAF Instructor Pilots (IPs) graded each maneuver. No practically significant differences were found in performance: differences among conditions were small and not operationally relevant. Pilots actually rated SA higher and workload lower when using the F-16 HUD, even though HUD and HDD gauge formats differed when using this display. Pilots also rated the F-16 HUD higher than the MIL-STD for facilitating an efficient crosscheck, not presenting conflicting cues, and using an intuitive data manipulation scheme. The results support a conclusion that consistency within a PFD is more important than consistency across head-up and head-down PFDs: differences in location, color, and display medium may facilitate perceptual and attentional separation of the information displayed.
