The Private Citizen's Guide to Government Sales Gary Denning,2010-02-06 Each year the federal government sells billions of dollars of surplus, seized, forfeited and exchange/sale assets. In fact, over $3.6 billion dollars worth of assets were sold last year online.Buy new, seized, and surplus merchandise and real estate from the government for pennies on the dollar. From Treasury bills to wild horses and houses, you name it and a government web site probably sells it.Best of all from the consumer's standpoint, the government is not out to make a profit, so most items are sold at or below cost or fair market value. Plus, purchasing from the government helps to defer cost of running the government, which saves taxpayers' dollars.The trick to taking advantage of these Government sales is knowing where the sales are held, how the sales process works and which government sites allow you to buy online.This book is designed to walk you through the entire government sales process and gives you information about sales methods and sale locations. Describes items for sale, and lists addresses, telephone numbers, and web sites for further information. And also provides you with a complete state by state listing of all government sales websites, so you can instantly find the items for sale in your state or anywhere else in the nation.
