Flat Kick Balls and Bent Hula Hoops Failyn Brooks,2011-05-31 Starting a new school is challenging. But to put classrooms and an office in the back rooms of a building, share public toilets, and be content with a gravel-filled playground was a learning experience for both the staff and students of a new Charter school in the Las Vegas desert. Things got even worse when one of the classrooms was reclaimed by the landlord and the office had to relocate to part of the singlewide portable building. The phones wouldn't work, the keys were wrong, the lunchroom was reclaimed, the kick balls went flat and the hula hoops were bent out of shape. The new campus had mice, and incomplete kitchen, not enough storage, a weird security system, more phone problems and orange pictures. Through it all, the students took everything in stride.

Does the average sports nut know that French King Charles VIII died after banging his head playing real tennis in April 1498? Or that Australian aborigines played the original Australian Rules football with inflated possum skins? Or that King Henry VIII bowled with cannon balls? If not, that is a great reason to delve into this miscellany of ball sports and avail oneself of its plethora of spherical and ovoid facts, beautifully illustrated by cartoonist Tony Kitchell. All known ball sports on the planet are covered, including major sports such as European football, cricket, rugby, and tennis, through to the lesser known but equally fascinating korfbal, tacraw, torball, Gaelic football, and stoolball.
