The Lucky Seven (Classic Reprint) John Taintor Foote, 2015-07-12 Excerpt from The Lucky Seven I have just finished reading Loeb on Biological Inference. He has given me a headache and hurt my pride. He has told me that I am not the captain of my soul. I am merely the plaything of heredity. My habits of mind and body are the promptings of remorseless protoplasms which are moving me unswervingly to my appointed destiny. Although this scientific conclusion has left me shaken and dejected, it explains many things. It explains why the Japanese - an acute and practical people - worship their ancestors. It explains Mary's Mary - I have never understood Mary's Mary until now. It explains old Mr. Trescott in the double role of dog-breeder and prophet.
