Geochemical Assessment of Subaqueous Tailings Disposal in Buttle Lake, British Columbia ,1990 Limited evidence suggests that the chemical reactivity of tailings is in fact inhibited by storage underwater, and that such storage may be a preferred long-term disposal option. To assess the long-term environmental feasibility of subaqueous disposal of mine tailings, this report examines the waters and sediments of the south basin of Buttle Lake, B.C. (the site of an inactive submerged tailings deposit). The copper, zinc and lead-rich mine tailings were deposited in the lake via a submerged outfall from 1966-84. The tailings are widespread across the basin and are being covered by a thin veneer of natural sediments. The report presents a detailed study of the distributions of metals in both the solid phases and interstitial waters of the sediments, and in the overlying surface waters.

Air Pollution XXI J. W. S. Longhurst, C. A. Brebbia, 2013 Containing papers presented at the twenty-first in a successful series of conferences on the modelling, monitoring and management of air pollution, the book Air Pollution XXI covers what has become a widespread and growing challenge to the international community. Governments face a need to balance concern over its known impacts on local and global health and the environment with improving or maintaining economic development. The key to achieving that balance is to use science to identify the nature and scale of air pollution impacts and to formulate effective policies and regulations. As our knowledge and application of the science of air pollution improves, we are better able to predict, assess and mitigate the implications air pollution has for local, regional, national and international economic systems. The papers deal in the book treat advances in a wide variety of topics, including: Air pollution modelling; Monitoring and measuring; Air quality management; Indoor air pollution; Aerosols and particles; Emission Studies; Air pollution chemistry; Source identification; Global and regional studies; Exposure and health Effects; Economics of air pollution control; Policy and legislation; Case studies; Innovative technologies.
