Acquisition of Voice Output Communication Aid by Children with Severe Mental Handicap [PDF], Kei-Chit Brenda Ng, 2017-01-27 This dissertation, Acquisition of Voice Output Communication Aid by Children With Severe Mental Handicap: a Case Study by [PDF], Kei-chit, Brenda, Ng, was obtained from The University of Hong Kong (Pokfulam, Hong Kong) and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons: Attribution 3.0 Hong Kong License. Abstract: Abstract The purpose of the present study was to introduce a voice output communication aid (VOCA) to three children with severe mental handicap and to investigate the possibility of these children to acquire the use of the VOCA for basic communication needs. Results indicated that all three subjects showed significant improvement in the use of the VOCA to make requests for twelve items in three routine activities after intervention. The results illustrated that assistive communication devices may be successfully used by individuals with severe mental handicap. The use of the VOCA by the subjects across different settings and communication partners were also evaluated to investigate their generalization skills. Results varied across subjects. Two subjects were able to generalize the use of the VOCA to an untrained environment but were unable to generalize the use of the VOCA to an unfamiliar communication partner. The remaining subject was not able to generalize the learned communication skills to a new environment nor an unfamiliar communication partner. In addition, the results of the comprehension probes indicated that improvement in speech comprehension could be an additional benefit to learning to communicate with a VOCA. The implications of these results and recommendations for future research are discussed. iv DOI: 10.5353/th_b2684058 Subjects: Voice output communication aids Children with mental disabilities - Education

Augmentative and Assistive Communication with Children Lesley E. Mayne, Sharon M. Rogers,2020-05-21 This practical resource is designed to help the families and professionals who support children who use augmentative and assistive communication (AAC) to interact with the world around them. The research-based Hear Me into Voice protocol, presented at the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association Annual Convention in 2018, the California Speech-Language Hearing Association Annual Convention in 2017, and the International Society for Augmentative and Alternative Communication Conference in 2016, provides communication partners with a functional knowledge of the child's communication skills and provides a practical intervention plan to carry forward. Through this protocol and intervention plan, communication partners can engage with the child's personal voice, through their varying multimodal forms of communication; the child is given the space to grow into a competent and confident communicator. Key features include: Photocopiable and downloadable resources, including the Hear Me into Voice protocol, an AAC report shell template, an AAC report teaching template, and tools including how to make a communication wallet, and a Let's Chat communication partner tip card template. Guidance for offering AAC intervention sessions, including an intervention plan supported by case studies Practical activities that can be used to engage children with complex communication profiles Engaging and easy to follow, this resource is not only essential for professionals and students looking to support children with complex language needs, but also families looking to understand their child's unique communication style.

The Frenchay E-Tran Frame Speechmark,2019-06-15 The E-train (eye-transfer) frame is a low-tech communication aid for people who have difficulty with speech. How does it work? The frame is held by the communication partner and is in front of the user's face at eye level. The user looks at the place where the letter they wish to communicate is positioned and then to the corresponding colour disc of that letter. The communication partner confirms each letter. If appropriate they can pre-empt the word the user is building up. Who can use it? Anyone who is able to move their eyes intentionally and has basic spelling skills, (for example individuals with MND or MS). A consistent yes/no response does need to be established between the user and the communication partner, so choices can be confirmed. Where can it be used? Anywhere! One advantage of the E-tran Frame is that it is lightweight and portable and can be used in places where other communication aids may not be applicable - for example, in the bath. It can be used in addition to other methods of AAC the user may have and is particularly helpful at times when the user is too tired to use more high-tech methods.

EBOOK: ADULTS WITH LEARNING DIFFICULTIES Jeannie Sutcliffe,1990-11-16 This is a practical handbook for all those who wish to offer high quality learning opportunities to adults with learning difficulties. It stresses the quality of provision throughout, and is illustrated by many examples of good practice from all areas of curriculum and delivery. The importance of the widest possible range of learning opportunities is also emphasized, and providers are urged to go beyond the limited menu of basic and social skills. For too long education has been a process done to rather than with this group of learners. This book advocates a learner-centred approach based on choice and decision-making by people with learning difficulties.

Augmentative and Alternative Communication for Adults with Acquired Neurologic Disorders David R. Beukelman, Kathryn M. Yorkston, Joe Reichle, 2000 The loss of speech in adulthood due to acquired disabilities causes an enormous life change for the person it happens to -- and everyone close to them. With this important book, you'll explore the challenges these individuals face during the transition from speaking to using augmentative and alternative communications (AAC). You'll learn new ways to design individualized AAC systems that will help rebuild their communicative confidence and encourage acceptance of their new lives -- and for some, even before speech is lost. Practical, and accessible, this research-based resource addresses recent social, medical, and technical changes and how they affect adults with communication disorders. Part 1 discusses the everyday transition issues they struggle with -- such as establishing new communication roles and integrating their natural speech with AAC -- while Part 2 covers the six leading neurological disorders in adults: amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, Huntington and Parkinson's diseases, traumatic brain injury, aphasia, and dementia.

Augmentative and Alternative Communication Stephen von Tetzchner, Mogens Hygum Jensen, 1996 Augmentative and alternative communication concerns the use of non-speech communication modes for people unable to use speech and for augmenting communication for people with limited spoken language. This book focuses on the use of manual and graphic communication systems for clinical populations with developmental disorders of speech and language, including children, adolescents and adults with autism, dysphasia, intellectual impairment and motor impairment. Among the topics covered are: augmentative and alternative communication in Europe; joint attention and communication; implications for assessment and alternative language intervention in autism and related disorders; language input and attention strategies; communication functions in aided language use; being an interesting conversation partner; a neurolinguistic approach to graphic language intervention; augmented telecommunication for people with intellectual impairment; improving communication and language skills of children with cerebral palsy; the social world of non-speaking people; and the psychology and sociology of introducing augmentative and alternative communication in Hungary.

Disability, Augmentative Communication, and the American Dream Ronald J. Berger, Jon A. Feucht, Jennifer Flad, 2013-12-12 In Disability, Augmentative Communication, and the American Dream the authors use a qualitative "mixed methods" study framed by analytical insights from disability studies to show how disability is not just an individual experience but a social phenomenon. The book focuses on the life story of Jon Feucht, a man who was born with a form of cerebral palsy that left him impaired in his lower and upper body and unable to speak without the use of an assistive communication device. He eventually overcame all odds and achieved academic success, and is currently a doctoral candidate in education leadership and policy.
