Traffic Control Thomas R. Horton,2012-12-06 At the close of the year 1900, motor vehicle registrations throughout the United States totaled 8000. These vehicles rode on unpaved and often dusty country roads. The only problem of traffic was an occasional pedestrian or a frightened horse or cow frenzied by the roar of this new creature. Today more than 82,000,000 registrations, representing 50% of the world's automobiles, are recorded in this country. In 1963 these vehicles traveled 798 billion miles over newly constructed modern highways, expressways, freeways, quickways, and thru ways, as well as improved rural and urban roads and streets. Out of all this has sprung the traffic engineer. Today's modern roadway is an engineering structure which has been developed through sound principles of design with provisions for safety and efficiency. An example of this safety factor can be found by the exacting specifications for cross sections, grades, roadside control, medians, and other design features. For many years, the responsibility for controlling traffic fell naturally into the domain of the police. However, as traffic increased, many problems developed which were beyond the scope of normal police work. Since the highway system is an engineering structure which requires an engineering approach to appraise operating problems and engineering techniques to solve them, the traffic engineer came into being.

Adequacies of the Air Traffic Control Systems in the New York City Area United States. Congress. House. Committee on Public Works and Transportation. Subcommittee on Aviation,1980 In recent weeks [June 30-July 10] there has been a rash of reports of near-misses in the skies over New York. The purpose of this hearing is to try to determine what has caused these incidents and what can be done to prevent further such incidents before we have a disaster. The incidents that have been reported thus far have varied in terms of the types of aircraft involved, the degree of danger, that is, how close to collision the aircraft came and how many people were involved, and what caused the incident. In some of the cases, there is also a question as to whether the incident actually occurred or whether it was fabricated. Let me recount briefly the events that occurred --Page 1.
