Selected Papers on Night Vision Technology R. Hradaynath,2001 This collection of 104 papers is divided into two parts. Part One, Image Intensification, focuses on developments with image intensified tubes. Part Two, Thermal Imaging, concentrates on the practical applications of night vision technology for its main users: the armed forces.

Simulating Night Vision Goggle Effects in a Virtual Environment Robert J. Pleban,2002 This research examined the capabilities of virtual environments to simulate night vision goggle (NVG) effects. Different solutions for simulating NVG images were assessed. Two conditions simulated NVGs but used different software approaches. Two additional conditions simulated unaided night environments that required soldiers to wear NVGs. Four-man infantry teams conducted urban operation missions under each condition. Objective assessments were obtained on the number of events correctly detected and the average time required to detect an event. Subjective assessments of task difficulty and image fidelity were also made. No significant differences were found across night conditions for either event detection or time. Significant differences in task difficulty ratings occurred for movement, visual detection, and maintaining situation awareness. In general, tasks were more difficult to perform while wearing the NVGs compared to simulated versions of NVG images. Soldiers also ranked the conditions involving actual NVGs as more realistic. The unique contribution of virtual environments for night operations training may be at the entry level. However, specific image fidelity issues associated with the use of NVGs in simulated unaided night environments must be addressed if this approach is to be used as an effective training medium.--Stinet.

Development and Evaluation of the Panoramic Night Vision Goggle ,1999 A novel approach to significantly increasing the field of view (FOV) of night vision goggles (NVGs) has been developed and demonstrated. This approach uses four image intensifier tubes instead of the usual two to produce a very wide 100 degree horizontal by about 40 degree vertical FOV. A conceptual working model, designated the Panoramic NVG, has been fabricated and evaluated.

Helicopter Flights with Night-Vision Goggles National Aeronautics and Space Adm Nasa,2018-10-19 Night-vision goggles (NVGs) and, in particular, the advanced, helmet-mounted Aviators Night-Vision-Imaging System (ANVIS) allows helicopter pilots to perform low-level flight at night. It consists of light intensifier tubes which amplify low-intensity ambient illumination (star and moon light) and an optical system which together produce a bright image of the scene. However, these NVGs do not turn night into day, and, while they may often provide significant advantages over unaided night flight, they may also result in visual fatigue, high workload, and safety hazards. These problems reflect both system limitations and human-factors issues. A brief description of the technical characteristics of NVGs and of human night-vision capabilities is followed by a description and analysis of specific perceptual problems which occur with the use of NVGs in flight. Some of the issues addressed include: limitations imposed by a restricted field of view; problems related to binocular rivalry; the consequences of inappropriate focusing of the eye; the effects of ambient illumination levels and of various types of terrain on image quality; difficulties in distance and slope estimation; effects of dazzling; and visual fatigue and superimposed symbology. These issues are described and analyzed in terms of their possible consequences on helicopter pilot performance. The additional influence of individual differences among pilots is emphasized. Thermal imaging systems (forward looking infrared (FLIR)) are described briefly and compared to light intensifier systems (NVGs). Many of the phenomena which are described are not readily understood. More research is required to better understand the human-factors problems created by the use of NVGs and other night-vision aids, to enhance system design, and to improve training methods and simulation techniques. Extended Use of Night Vision Goggles: An Evaluation of Comfort for Monocular and Biocular Configurations ,1997 Forty-four military participants were tested in a field experiment to compare the relative discomfort experienced when monocular versus biocular night vision goggles (NVGs) were worn for an extended period of time. Participants traversed wooded terrain to reach various stations where they performed a variety of military and field craft tasks. The total test time was 4 hours. The participants rated their psychological and physiological feelings of discomfort at the completion of the test and again the following evening. Objective measures of NVG optical adjustments were also recorded. The participants who wore the biocular goggle reported a higher incidence of tight neck muscles than did the participants who wore the monocular goggle. However, no other significant differences in discomfort were found that could be attributed to the ocular configuration of the goggles. All participants complained about discomfort from the head harness.

Night Vision Goggles in Civil Helicopter Operations ,2005 This report provides an introduction to the benefits and risks associated with helicopter operations using Generation III NVGs [night vision goggles] by describing how they operate, the different elements required for their effective use, and their capabilities and limitations--Introd.

Transmissivity and Night Vision Goggle Compatibility Data for Select Aircraft Transparencies ,2003 This document is a compilation of spectral transmissivity data measured from numerous aircraft transparencies. The spectral transmissivity of each part was measured from wavelengths of 450 nm through 950 nm. Some parts were also measured at several different angles relative to the optical axis of the spectroradiometric instrument. The measurements yielded both visible light and near infrared (NIR) spectra. The NIR data were used to calculate night vision goggle-weighted transmissivity (TNVG) values (Pinkus and Task, 1997). TNVG is a measure of a transparency's compatibility when it is used in conjunction with night vision goggles (NVGs). NVGs utilize the NIR portion (600 nm through 950 nm) of the night sky ambient illumination. Generally speaking, the higher the TNVG coefficient, the higher the NVG visual performance (Pinkus & Task, 1998a; Pinkus & Task, 1997).

Night Vision Goggles for Helicopter Pilots Mike Becker,2022-04-21 A technical helicopter flight training book covering the features of various aviation NVG devices, how NVGs work, operating issues, dealing with the unique hazards and risks of NVGs in helicopter operations, and establishing safe and regulatory-compliant operational systems.

Further Development of the Panoramic Night Vision Goggle ,1998 A novel approach to significantly increasing the field of view (FOV) of night vision goggles (NVGs) has been developed. This approach uses four image intensifier tubes instead of the usual two to produce a 100 degree wide FOV. A conceptual demonstrator device was fabricated in November 1995 and limited flight evaluations were performed. Further development of this approach continues with eleven advanced technology demonstrators scheduled for delivery by the end of December 1998 that will feature five different design configurations. Some of the units will be earmarked for ejection seat equipped aircraft due to their low profile design allowing the goggle to be retained safely during and after ejection. Other deliverables will be more traditional in design approach and concentrate more on transport and helicopter aircraft as well as ground personnel. Planned testing to collect both subjective and quantitative data will begin in November 1998.
