High-Temperature Corrosion and Materials Applications George Y. Lai,2007-01-01 George Lai's 1990 book, High-Temperature Corrosion of Engineering Alloys, is recognized as authoritative and is frequently consulted and often cited by those in the industry. His new book, almost double in size with seven more chapters, addresses the new concerns, new technologies, and new materials available for those engaged in high-temperature applications. As we strive for energy efficiency, the realm of high-temperature environments is expanding and the need for information on high temperature materials applications was never greater. In addition to extensive expansion on most of the content of the original book, new topics include erosion and erosion-corrosion, low NOx combustion in coal-fired boilers, fluidized bed combustion, and the special demands of waste-to-energy boilers, waste incinerators, and black liquor recovery boilers in the pulp and paper industry. The corrosion induced by liquid metals is discussed and protection options are presented.

Develop Maintenance Strategy Selection Procedures for Pavements Incorporating Semi-rigid Or Chemically Stabilized Layers Thomas J. Freeman,Dallas N. Little,1998 TxDOT does not currently have a formal maintenance strategy selection procedure for pavements which have semi-rigid or chemically stabilized layers. The approach used was to interview experienced TxDOT personnel in each district and to determine the appropriate maintenance treatments and timing in that district for a variety of expected situations and conditions. The result of this research was a set of treatment assignments for each district and for airports, for a matrix of expected conditions including distress type, severity, and quantity; traffic level or importance; rate of development; and purpose of the treatment. A computer program and user's manual were developed to assist in treatment selection.
