Paint and Sip Vol. 4 Lisa Maus, 2019-09-09 Painting is so much fun to do but it's one of those things that you have to practice at to get better. Well actually most things are like that but with painting there are so many aspects to getting the composition down onto the canvas that it takes a lot of the joy out of the process. Yes, painting really can be a struggle if you don't know what you are doing and don't have a good teacher to guide you. Many people take group classes and while they are fun, they can leave you a little lost as to how you would do that again if you had to on your own. Some people have really big goals when it comes to learning how to paint while many just want to enjoy the process. Either way when you do sit down to paint it should be fun, relaxing and in the end, you should have learned something or at least feel satisfied with your results. This book can help with that. While it won't make you a master after one lesson, and there are people out there who believe that if it's not great the first time then they give up, it will get you better every time you paint. These lessons are a system, that teach perspective without the math. These lessons can help you learn a way of painting that will let you grow and learn as an artist. So whether you are looking for fun with painting on those rainy afternoons or in groups or you really to want to make a bigger goal out of the world of art then why not use a system that teaches you, even for beginners, how to start, create and end with wonderful results.
