Port of Stockton

Port Jefferson Robert Maggio,Earlene O'Hare,Port Jefferson Free Library,2013 The history of Port Jefferson, a village on Long Island's North Shore, is rich with the lore of ships and the sea. Once called Drowned Meadow because of flooding at high tide, the town was renamed Port Jefferson in 1836. Those same harbor waters, which overran their banks, would become the natural resource that made Port Jefferson's first industry--shipbuilding--possible. By the mid-19th century, the village had become one of the principal shipbuilding centers on Long Island and a major port of entry. The names of many prominent shipbuilding families are preserved in the village's streets and institutions, including Mather, Jones, Bayles, and Hawkins. When the shipbuilding industry declined in the late 1800s, Port Jefferson used its seaside location to reinvent itself as a recreation destination, attracting notables such as Franklin Roosevelt. The community's heritage is evidenced today in the numerous well-kept historic homes and buildings that stand along the hilly, tree-lined streets overlooking the harbor.

Port Norris Pencillings Thomas F. Hollinger,2016-05-20 Port Norris, N.J. is a small oyster village located at the mouth of the Maurice River. This book is intended to provide a glimpse of what life was like in 1883 as seen through the eyes of local correspondents. These correspondents would record the happenings in their town and send them to the local paper to be published. This is the first in a planned series of books dedicated to our unique village, which in a few years would become known as the oyster capital of the world and host more millionaires per square mile than anywhere else in the country.
