AI on Trial Mark Deem, Peter Warren, 2022-06-16 AI on Trial follows the same process as a High Court trial, and in so doing it takes an innovative approach to the most innovative of technological areas. Addressing the current state of artificial intelligence and the law, the book identifies why the technology should be 'placed on trial' and presents relevant evidence, before passing 'judgment' and proposing a Manifesto for Responsible AI and a blueprint for an ethical, legal and regulatory framework. The 'trial' examines such questions as: -Should AI, a computer technology, have rights and responsibilities? -What are the legal and ethical issues created by the implicit bias of coders and data sets? -Is AI racist? -Do we need a Hippocratic Oath in AI? -Could AI lead to a data war to end all wars? -Can we trust AI? Readers will benefit from understanding the necessary considerations in formulating any legal framework and will come to recognise the role of any such framework, not only in preventing harm, but in supporting growth and technological advancement. Written from the viewpoint of practitioners, academics and journalists, this is an essential title for all information and technology law practitioners, in-house counsel, data protection officers, company directors, finance directors, academics and students. Technologists, regulators, legislators and journalists interested in getting to grips with the issues presented by AI will also benefit. This title is included in Bloomsbury Professional's Cyber Law online service.

EFFECTIVENESS OF VOCABULARY LE Chok-Yee Cheung, 2017-01-27 This dissertation, The Effectiveness of Vocabulary Learning Strategies of Chinese Low Achievers by Chok-ye, Cheung, 2017, was obtained from The University of Hong Kong (Pokfulam, Hong Kong) and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons: Attribution 3.0 Hong Kong License. The content of this dissertation has not been altered in any way. We have altered the formatting in order to facilitate the ease of printing and reading of the dissertation. All rights not granted by the above license are retained by the author. Abstract: Abstract of thesis entitled The effectiveness of vocabulary learning strategies of Chinese low achievers submitted by Cheung Chok Yee for the degree of Master of Applied Linguistics at the University of Hong Kong September, 2004 The study explores the effect of the Keyword method and the Combined Context method on learning English vocabulary by Chinese low achieving students within a classroom situation. The two methods were compared by using a between-subject approach and a within-subject approach. Eighty F.1 remedial class students participated in the present study and they were divided into 2 groups. Group A students went through all the processes of this study while Group B tried out the Combined Context method only. The present study also aims to explore more about the different practices of the Keyword method. Previous research on second language (L2) vocabulary learned by the Keyword method has primarily involved the use of first language (L1) keywords to learn vocabulary of other languages. The present study employed both L1 and L2 keywords to learn a group of new words. Students learning the Keyword method (Group A) were instructed to learn 20 English words by using 10 L1 keywords and 10 L2 keywords. The results were compared with the results of the Combined Context group (Group B) in which students were taught the same 20 words. Students in Group A were then required to learn another 20 English words with self generated keywords and another 20 words by using the Combined Context method. Questionnaires were distributed to all the subjects to investigate their usual vocabulary learning strategies and their perceived usefulness. Students' feedback on the different learning approaches was reviewed after the experiments. The overall results reveal that students using the Keyword method outperformed the ones using the Combined Context method. Concerning the differences between using L1 and L2 keywords, they did not differ significantly in the immediate and conditions while the use of L2 keywords has shown to be more beneficial to written form recall conditions. No significance difference was found in the results between teacher-supplied keyword and student-generated keyword conditions. The implications of these findings, the limitations and suggestions for further research are discussed. Study Gods Yi-Lin Chiang, 2022-08-23 How privileged adolescents in China acquire status and why this helps them succeed Study Gods offers a rare look at the ways privileged youth in China prepare themselves to join the ranks of the global elite. Yi-Lin Chiang shows how these competitive Chinese high schoolers first become “study gods” (xueshen), a term describing academically high-performing students. Constant studying, however, is not what explains their success, for these young people appear god-like in their effortless abilities to excel. Instead, Chiang explores how elite adolescents achieve by absorbing and implementing the rules surrounding status. Drawing from eight years of fieldwork and extensive interviews, Chiang reveals the important lessons that Chinese youth learn in their pursuit of elite status. They understand the hierarchy of the status system, recognizing and acquiring the characteristics that are prized, while avoiding those that are not. They maintain status by expecting differential treatment and performing status-based behaviors, which guide their daily interactions with peers, teachers, and parents. Lastly, with the help of resourceful parents, they rely on external assistance in the face of potential obstacles and failures. Chiang looks at how students hone these skills, applying them as they head to colleges and careers around the world, and in their relationships with colleagues and supervisors. Highlighting another facet of China’s rising power, Study Gods announces the arrival of a new generation to the

As successful language learners are found to make good use of vocabulary learning strategies to facilitate the learning process, researchers are interested in investigating whether less competent language learners can also benefit from strategy instruction. The present study aimed to examine the relative effectiveness of and attitudes towards the two vocabulary strategies, namely the keyword method and the context method in L2 vocabulary acquisition among 61 Cantonese-speaking Chinese students in Hong Kong. The study involved two classes of Secondary one students studying in a band one English-medium co-educational secondary school. In the first round of the study, Class A and Class B learnt a list of 10 target vocabulary items. Quantitative and qualitative data were collected through vocabulary pre-tests, post-tests, questionnaires and interviews. In the second round, Class A and Class B swapped the learning conditions to learn another list of 10 target vocabulary items. The same procedures as for the first round were followed. Findings of this study indicated, first, the superiority of the keyword method over the context method in vocabulary retention. Second, the majority of the participants thought the context method was more useful than the keyword method and preferred the former one in the future. To conclude, this study may be of importance in investigating the effectiveness of the two strategies by Chinese learners in the Hong Kong school context, as well as in providing a better understanding of their attitudes towards the two strategies.
