Solar Shading Systems: Design, Performance, and Integrated Photovoltaics

Maria Mandalaki, Theodoros Tsoutsos, 2019-07-19 This is the first book to describe the development of and state of the art in solar shading devices in buildings, detailing all methods of evaluating shading systems according to thermal and visual comfort. The issue of energy balance in buildings is gaining importance as conventional energy sources dwindle and become more expensive. As such, environmental concerns should be considered in overall design decisions. The book discusses the role sun control “machines” play in controlling solar and thermal radiation. It examines their geometry, their position in relation to glazing and their operation (in the cases of movable systems) to control the heat and light entering a building, as well as how their material and color influence their performance. This book appeals to architects and designers who are interested in efficient energy facade design.

Solar Shading of Buildings P. J. Littlefair, 1999 Paul Littlefair describes a number of commonly used devices and techniques designed to protect buildings from solar radiation. The study includes old and new methods and identifies the advantages & disadvantages of each technique or material cited.

Solar Shading of Buildings P. J. Littlefair, 2018 This report describes commonly used shading devices and some new developments. It gives the advantages and disadvantages of each kind of shading device. The guidance focuses on shading requirements in the UK and similar climates and latitudes.

External Solar Shading with Wood Patrick Hislop,Philip O'Leary,2012 Wood has traditionally been used for many forms of solar shading in the past. And because of its versatility, ease of working and easy maintenance, wood has an important role in the design of modern shading devices. However, the prime reason for using wood for solar screening is usually its attractive appearance, whether left to bleach naturally or finished in any colour. Many forms of sun screening are now becoming an accepted feature in the visual appearance of many buildings, but their primary role will always be to moderate the effect of the sun's rays on the internal environment of the building. This publication deals with external screening devices, comparing nine types now in use. It is limited to those screening systems that are wholly or partially wood based but does include metal support systems and metal hardware necessary for operating louvres.

Retrofitting of Solar Shading P. J. Littlefair,2002 Solar shading can have an important benefit on the environment in buildings and can give valuable savings in cooling energy. This paper describes the shading systems commonly used in retrofit and gives guidance on their selection and design. Performance data for different systems is tabulated for easy comparisons.

Summertime Solar Performance of Windows with Shading Devices Paul Littlefair, 2010-11 The main purpose of the book is to expand the scope of revisionary studies of the thirties by analyzing novels using recent innovations in critical theory. The book adds to the research of Barbara Foley, Michael Denning, Alan Wald, and others who have challenged Cold-War-era accounts of the decade's socialist and communist culture. The book explores leftist literature from the thirties as balanced between two antithetical philosophical modalities: identity and ideology. Writers create identitarian fiction, he argues, as they attempt to appeal to a mainstream audience using familiar types and patterns culled from mass culture. They engage ideology, on the other hand, when they use narrative as a means of critiquing those same types and patterns using strategies of ideological critique similar to those of their European contemporary Georg Lukács.
