Using Tax Data to Better Capture Top Incomes in Official UK Income Inequality Statistics Dominic Webber, Richard P. Tonkin, Martin Shine, 2020 It is widely recognised that household surveys do not fully capture the incomes of the very richest individuals and households, particularly those among the so-called top 1%, for reasons including non-response and under-reporting. As a consequence, estimates based on survey data alone typically understate true levels of inequality.

Taxes and Taxation Trends Jolanta Iwin-Garzyńska, 2018-04-20 Taxes are a constant part of life for every company and a constant element of economics, finance, and financial law. Any changes observed in the science and theory also apply to the importance and position of taxes in the practice of corporate finance, public finance, and economic growth. Beside this, a new meaning of taxes in the economies of countries in the world and the European Union is introduced. Taxes will always introduce risks and uncertainties in business, due to the high volatility and uncertainty of tax law. Moreover, being a category that affects the economic growth, they cause disturbances in stability and welfare of the state. Therefore, while considering the essence of taxes in a country, one should not consider this category in isolation from corporate finance and social welfare. Two things are certain in the world: death and taxes.

Expanding Access to Administrative Data : the Case of Tax Authorities in Finland and the UK. M. Almunia, 2019 The article discusses typical issues in getting access to and using high-quality administrative tax data for research purposes. The authors discuss research involving both quasi- and field experiments implemented together with the tax authority. They reflect on practical solutions that promote co-creation of knowledge and reduce information asymmetries between researchers and practitioners, based on the experiences of working with the tax authorities in Finland and the UK. They also provide examples of how to improve the overall research environment focusing on two successful case studies: the HMRC Datalab in the UK and the remote access to data from Statistics Finland. Finally, they propose two key arguments to persuade policymakers elsewhere to follow similar practices: improved data security and equality of access across researchers.
