The Coming of the Dryas Nicholas Thornbro,William Thornbro,2024-01-25 We are today newcomers to climate events that have not been seen for a very long time and which Nature has played out many times before. It is evident from an analysis of the record of the past that carbon dioxide has not played a determining role during times of climate change and has obscured our view of far more critical forces of change. We have placed ourselves in a high-stakes gamble with Nature, and we should realize that when it comes to climate, Nature holds all of the cards. The area of the North Atlantic and the Subpolar Seas is now known to be a precursor to global change, and it is apparent that over the last several decades, every important aspect of its climate has increasingly experienced great change. Because of the vital role of this region, and that the changes there are driven by global influences that are also changing, and because of the timing in the Earth's glacial cycle in which we find ourselves, we should be cognizant that an expected cooling, which has now begun there, could propagate into a global transition to an entirely new, glacial, climate state.

The Coming of the Dryas MR William Thornbro,2012-08-01 We are today newcomers to some climate events that have not been seen for a very long time, and which nature has played out many times before. It is plainly evident, from an analysis of the record of the past, that carbon dioxide has not played a determining role during times of climate change, and in fact has obscured our view of far more important forces of change. We have placed ourselves in a high stakes gamble with nature, and we should realize that when it comes to climate, that nature holds all, or nearly all, of the cards. The climate in the North Atlantic and the Subpolar Seas is now known to be a precursor to change globally, and it is apparent that over the last several decades every important aspect of this region's climate is increasingly experiencing great change. Because of the important role of this region, and that the changes there are really driven by global influences that are also undergoing change, and because of the timing in the Earth's glacial cycle in which we find ourselves today, we should be cognizant of the possibility that an expected cooling in this region could propagate into a global event.

Frank Batten Connie M. Sage,2011-08-29 Frank Batten Sr. (1927–2009) created the Weather Channel in 1982, despite mocking by colleagues in the media that around-the-clock weather broadcasts would be as exciting as watching paint dry. The network, and later its companion website, Weather.com, became the largest private weather company in the world and an American cultural icon. Yet few have heard of Batten, a media pioneer whose Virginia newspaper was the only major daily to back school integration. At a time when American corporate greed was making headlines, without fanfare and limelight Batten built a media empire centered on honesty, integrity, and ethics. Starting out in his uncle's newspaper business in Norfolk, Virginia, as a reporter and advertising salesman, he assumed leadership of the Virginian-Pilot and Ledger-Star at the age of twenty-seven and grew Landmark Communications into a media powerhouse. He championed racial equality, a position not often taken in Virginia during the 1950s. His flagship newspaper, the Pilot, was the only daily paper in Virginia to back court-ordered school desegregation. He created two billion-dollar businesses and gave away more than $400 million to charity, nearly all of it to education. As chairman of the Associated Press from 1982 to 1987, he helped guide the news agency back on a sound financial footing. Batten also faced a tremendous personal challenge that would have sidelined many: he lost his vocal cords to cancer two years before starting the Weather Channel. This is the untold story of a man whose name few recognize, yet who helped change the face of the media in the twentieth century.
