Estimating Windspeeds for Predicting Wildland Fire Behavior Frank A. Albini, 1979

The Analysis of Directional Time Series: Applications to Wind Speed and Direction Jens Breckling, 2012-12-06 Given a series of wind speeds and directions from the port of Fremantle the aim of this monograph is to detect general weather patterns and seasonal characteristics. To separate the daily land and sea breeze cycle and other short-term disturbances from the general wind, the series is divided into a daily and a longer term, synoptic component. The latter is related to the atmospheric pressure field, while the former is studied in order i) to isolate particular short-term events such as calms, storms and oscillating winds, and ii) to determine the land and sea breeze cycle which dominates the weather pattern for most of the year. All these patterns are described in detail and are related to the synoptic component of the data. Two time series models for directional data and a new measure of angular association are introduced to provide the basis for certain parts of the analysis.

Variation of the Drag Coefficient with Wind and Wave State Beverly J. Byars, 1985 The dissipation method is used to obtain estimates for the friction velocity U_{*} , as well as values for the neutral drag coefficient, C_{DN} , for data collected from a coastal tower off San Diego, California. C_{DN} is found to be independent of the ten-meter height windspeed, U_{10} , for velocities between 4-9 m/sec. Its value is estimated to be $(0.94 \pm 0.4) \times 10^{-3}$ which compares well with values by Smith (1980) and Large and Pond (1981). Definite trends in C_{DN} with fetch and sea state are also observed. Drag coefficient estimates are found to be higher for short fetch than for long fetch conditions. C_{DN} is also seen to increase sharply just before frontal passages and during sea breeze conditions when the waves are actively growing. With the windspeed and wave field reaching equilibrium, C_{DN} is found to decrease with time to a smaller and more constant value. (Author).

Synoptic-scale Influence on the Monterey Bay Sea-breeze Michael Charles Knapp, 1994 The diurnal fluctuations of the surface ambient wind associated with the sea-breeze are analyzed for the period May 01 through September 30, 1993 from a single station, Monterey airport, located on the southern Monterey Bay coast. Data analyzed included time series of wind speed, wind direction, clouds, precipitation and locally generated 3 hourly surface pressure analyses of California and the Pacific northwest. The characteristics of the sea-breeze circulation under varying synoptic-scale patterns are evaluated to determine the modifying roles of boundary layer stability, surface inversion strength, and low-level cloud amount on the resultant time of onset and peak intensity of the Monterey Bay sea-breeze. The primary modifying factor under all synoptic-scale pressure patterns was the boundary layer depth and stability with the differential heating taking longer to destabilize the boundary layer during the Trough regime.

Extreme Wind Speeds, Gustiness, and Variations with Height for MIL-STD 210B Norman Sissenwine, 1973 MIL-STD-210A, 'Climatic Extremes for Military Equipment', is being revised. The revision will include two sets of windspeed design goals for military equipment being developed for worldwide usage over land: (1) the speed up to which 'operations' are expected to proceed, (2) the speed that equipment should 'withstand' without irreversible damage. A study of gustiness and variations of wind with height during strong wind regimes is presented. Nomograms of gust factor versus gust duration and steady windspeed are used to assign the most dynamically effective gust according to equipment dimensions. Based on a power-law relationship, factors for adjusting windspeed to a common height to describe windspeed and gusts over the vertical extent of military equipment usage are presented. Also included is a tabulation of wind statistics for selected stations considered in the search for worldwide wind extremes.
