Atlas of the Human Body Branislav Vidic,Milan Milisavljevic,2017-03-10 Atlas of Human Body: Central Nervous System and Vascularization is a multidisciplinary approach to the technical coverage of anatomical structures and relationships. It contains surface and 3D dissection images, native and colored cross sectional views made in different planes, MRI comparisons, demonstrations of cranial nerve origins, distribution of blood vessels by dissection, and systematic presentation of arterial distribution from the precapillary level, using the methyl metacrylate injection and subsequent tissue digestion method. Included throughout are late prenatal (fetal) and early postnatal images to contribute to a better understanding of structure/relationship specificity of differentiation at various developmental intervals (conduits, organs, somatic, or branchial derivatives). Each chapter features clinical correlations providing a unique perspective of side-by-side comparisons of dissection images, magnetic resonance imaging and computed tomography. Created after many years of professional and scientific cooperation between the authors and their parent institutions, this important resource will serve researchers, students, and doctors in their professional work. Contains over 700 color photos of ideal anatomical preparations and sections of each part of the body that have been prepared, recorded, and processed by the authors. Covers existing gaps including developmental and prenatal periods, detailed vascular anatomy, and neuro anatomy. Features a comprehensive alphabetical index of structures for ease of use. Features a companion website which contains access to all images within the book.

Excerpt: ... CHAPTER XI THE NERVOUS SYSTEM Parts of the nervous system.--The nervous system is composed of five important parts, (i) One large nerve-centre--the brain. (2) A long nerve-centre in the spinal column--the spinal cord. (3) Many small nerve-centres--the ganglia--found at many places in the body. (4) The nerves which run from the nerve-centres out to every part of the body. (5) Nerve endings, as where a nerve ends in a muscle or gland. The nerve-cell.--The nervous system is composed of cells just as other parts of the body are, but they are quite different in shape. A nerve-cell in the spinal cord may have to control a cell of muscle in the hand. It must then be able to reach all the way from the cord to the hand. So we find that most nerve-cells have long branches running out from them. 14 209 As a rule, there is only one very long branch and a number of small ones. In Fig. 68 you can see the parts of a nerve-cell. It has a body and a nucleus, and is composed of the same kind of material as the other cells; but it is different in having the long branch that may reach out two or three feet from the body of the cell to another cell over which it has control. When we use any of the skeletal muscles, we must first send an order out on the long branches of the nerve-cells to the muscle-cells. When a large number of these cells are clustered together they are called a nervecentre, and a number of the long branches bound together are called a nerve. All the nerve-centres are in the brain, the spinal cord, and the ganglia. Everything we do and every movement we make starts in the nerve-centres. The brain.--The brain is the most important part of the human body. It is very delicate and easily injured, and so we find it well protected. It is...
