Testing of Barometers and Altimeter Altimeters United States. Bureau of Standards,1922

Investigations of Vertical Displays of Altitude Information Robert F. Mengelkoch,Robert C. Houston,1958 This is the first of a planned series of experiments, and was designed to compare performance of experienced pilots on a standard altimeter and a vertical, moving-tape altimeter on a specified series of flight tasks in a Link trainer. Twenty subjects flew the series of maneuvers using each altimeter and deviations from desired altitudes were observed. Analysis of the data resulted in the following conclusions: (1) under the experimental conditions, performance on the standard altimeter was significantly superior to performance on the vertical, moving-tape altimeter, (2) the method of evaluation is sufficiently sensitive to be a useful research tool, and (3) further evaluations of the effects of an expanded scale and additional training should be conducted. The results are discussed relative to the rather small overall difference in performance between the two altimeters.--Abstract.

Automatic Reporting System Altimeter Setting and Other Operational Data United States. Federal Aviation Administration,1979

An Autoranging Balloon Altimeter Robert H. Cordella,1978 This report documents a method of determining altitude based on the atmospheric pressure using the U.S. Standard Atmosphere, 1976 to model the pressure vs altitude profile. A precision pressure transducer facilitates the design, which is described in increasing levels of completeness from the basic block diagram to 'as built' schematics and pictures. The design algorithm, supporting firmware and software, is presented and explained. Test results confirm the design calculations and validate the altimeter's accuracy and resolution. (Author).
