The Red Book Ben Barton,2007 This is a fine collection of poetry and is a very good example of an individual voice. The Red Book brings together Ben Barton's collected small-press poems published from 1996 to 2006. Many have appeared in some of Britain's foremost 'little' magazines, including Scriptor, Roadworks and X Magazine. In the 40 poems in this book Barton explores many issues, from packing when moving house, My life packed away / in boxes / categorised. The thing / I said I would never do. to condemnation with a twist of alcohol and cigarettes, things I hate the most where he tells us you choke / garrotted year after year. Many of these poems are shorter snapshots, only a few lines long, which you find yourself wishing he had expanded and developed. There is the feeling that he feels this himself and he writes in WORK IN PROGRESS My notebook is full / Of opening lines // but that is all they are / What they will remain / / incomplete / (for now) / like me.
