Slow Release of Mosquito Repellents from Microporous Polyolefin Strands Antonio Benjamim Mapossa, 2019 Malaria is a principal cause of illness and death in countries where the disease is endemic. The indoor residual sprays of insecticides and indoor use of long-lasting insecticide-treated nets (LLINs) are practical methods of the prevention of malaria recommended by WHO. However, the elimination of malaria is creating difficulties as the current methods do not protect against mosquitoes biting outdoors. The purpose of this study was to develop a new product by incorporating repellents into inexpensive thermoplastic polymer namely poly(ethylene-co-vinyl acetate) (EVA) and linear low-density polyethylene (LLDPE) to control the release rate of mosquito repellents from microporous polyolefin strands, e.g. repellent bracelets and anklets which can be used for longer periods of time, say for three to six months. Four approaches were considered in this research. In the first study, the evaporation rate of repellents was determined using thermogravimetric analysis (TGA). The duration of protection against mosquitoes by the repellent is partially affected by the rate of loss of repellent due abrasion, penetration and evaporation. Therefore, the repellent evaporation rate can be regarded as one of the physical properties of repellents which might affect repellent efficiency. The results showed that three repellents, namely Icaridin, IR3535 and DEET, had a low volatility compared to the other repellents investigated. These three repellents are indicators of long protection time against mosquitoes. The second approach was to use the open-cell microporous strands as reservoirs for relatively large quantities of mosquito repellent. Repellents of interest include DEET, Icaridin, ethyl anthranilate and IR3535. Microporous polymer strands containing mosquito repellent were prepared by twin-screw extrusion compounding. A co-continuous phase structure was achieved by rapid quenching in an ice-water bath of the homogeneous polymer-repellent melt exiting the extruder. Phase separation occurred through spinodal decomposition which trapped the liquid repellent in the microporous polymer matrix. The extraction and TGA results corresponded well to the amount of repellent added in the compounding step, showing that very little repellent was lost during processing. The third approach showed that control of the repellent-release rate was possible with a skin-like membrane at the surfaces of the open-cell polymer-repellent strands extruded. The presence of a skin-like membrane of the polymer strands was studied using scanning electron microscopy and estimated by a mathematical model. It was found that some of the microporous polymer strands released the repellents at an almost constant rate. The experimental and predicted data fitted very well, showing the accuracy of the mathematical model developed. The last study demonstrated that the polyolefin strands that contained up to 30 wt% of either DEET or Icaridin provided effective protection against bites from the Anopheles arabiensis mosquito even after 12 weeks of ageing at 50 °C. This means that the bracelets or anklets made with polyolefin impregnated with DEET or Icaridin may offer a new effective control strategy which is cost effective for outdoor mosquito bites.

the history of humankind, showing how through millennia, the mosquito has been the single most powerful force in determining humanity's fate Why was gin and tonic the cocktail of choice for British colonists in India and Africa? What does Starbucks have to thank for its global domination? What has protected the lives of popes for millennia? Why did Scotland surrender its sovereignty to England? What was George Washington's secret weapon during the American Revolution? The answer to all these questions, and many more, is the mosquito. Across our planet since the dawn of humankind, this nefarious pest, roughly the size and weight of a grape seed, has been at the frontlines of history as the grim reaper, the harvester of human populations, and the ultimate agent of historical change. As the mosquito transformed the landscapes of civilization, humans were unwittingly required to respond to its piercing impact and universal projection of power. The mosquito has determined the fates of empires and nations, razed and crippled economies, and decided the outcome of pivotal wars, killing nearly half of humanity along the way. She (only females bite) has dispatched an estimated 52 billion people from a total of 108 billion throughout our relatively brief existence. As the greatest purveyor of extermination we have ever known, she has played a greater role in shaping our human story than any other living thing with which we share our global village. Imagine for a moment a world without deadly mosquitoes, or any mosquitoes, for that matter? Our history and the world we know, or think we know, would be completely unrecognizable. Driven by surprising insights and fast-paced storytelling, The Mosquito is the extraordinary untold story of the mosquito's reign through human history and her indelible impact on our modern world order.
