Survey of the Ocean Fisheries Off Delaware Bay John W. Reintjes, Charles M. Roithmayr, 1960 This is a final, supplemental report of a survey of the ocean fisheries off Delaware Bay, including the coastal waters lying between Barnegat, New Jersey and Chincoteague, Virginia, for the period 1954-57. Because of their seasonal nature, data pertaining to the winter fisheries (offshore otter trawl, trawl line, and gill net) were included from July 1953 through May 1958. Measurements of catch, catch per unit effort, and total fishing effort for the major fisheries of the area (excluding the menhaden purse-seine fishery) indicate that the otter-trawl and pot fisheries have remained relatively stable during the period. The surf-clam fishery has shown an increased production, but a decline in apparent abundance. Minor fisheries, including pound net, gill net, trawl line, hand line, and purse seine for food fish, have dwindled in importance, and some are near extinction. Recommendations concerning utilization of the fishery resources of the area and proposed studies, should waste disposal in the coastal water be contemplated, are included.
