Enrico Baj Michael Reynolds,2017-03-14 An Italian villa never before open to the public houses a trove of artistic creativity and design by one of the central figures of the Italian neo-avant garde. Not far from Milan, in the hills of the northern Italian countryside, lies the estate of famed Italian artist Enrico Baj. This jewel of a book offers a unique lens through which to consider a true artistic giant of the late twentieth century associated with Dada, Surrealism, Art Informel, and CoBrA, as well as Nuclear Art, a movement he cofounded. Organized as a tour of the artist's home, from full rooms designed with a great attention to detail to entire walls covered floor to ceiling with paintings by the artist to a headboard carved directly into a wall, almost every surface of the house is covered in work made by Baj himself. While his subject matter may have been deeply serious (many of Baj's works reveal an obsession with nuclear war and the abuse of political power), as this book shows, his work was always playful and vibrant, often incorporating bits of found materials like military medals, seashells, rope, and twine. Whether one focuses on the luxurious trim and tassel of a bedroom curtain or the deeply personal arrangement of treasured sculptures on a dressing room table, every corner of the estate is energized by the element of surprise. This book showcases the artist's individual touch and provides a wealth of playful vignettes to inspire homeowners, collectors, and artists alike.

King Tide at Baja Bradford Lemee,2009-04 Elsie Bishop beckons us with her flashing green eyes and frontier-like spirit to follow her and her worn hiking boots into the caves of remote Baja, the folksy cafA(c)s of Tijuana, and the sun-soaked mansions of La Jolla, California. We are horrified by a terrorist plot while being seduced by the delights of the US/Mexican border culture. A little lithium may be in order to calm down a bi-polar-like reaction that can sneak up on the reader. Elsieas frenetic life as an environmental monitor at the border becomes enmeshed with the often-at-odds concerns of the US Department of State, the CIA, the DEA, the FBI, and all branches of the Mexican government, military and otherwise. Events in Tijuana, San Deigo, Tecate and small villages in Baja signal a sea-change in the mercurial border world. There is a deadly shadow looming over the area, and Elsie, her colleague Roberto, and the governments of two countries are pressed to the snapping point. Determine the identity and motives of the figure behind the threat and take control, or helplessly observe the creative edge of madness slice away at the soft underbelly of the United States.
