From Farm to Fortune Horatio Alger,2021-05-10 The death of his Aunt Mary was almost as much of a blow to the lad as the loss of his mother, for it left him under the entire charge of his uncle, Abner Balberry. The latter had no children of his own and he made Nat work as hard as if he were a full-grown man.The Balberry farm was located in Ohio, not far from the town of Caswell. It consisted of one hundred acres of good land, with a house and several outbuildings. Among his neighbors Abner Balberry was considered the meanest man in the district. Abner himself thought he was a pretty good man and he counted himself a real pillow of the church, as he expressed it.For two years life on the Balberry farm had been one continual grind to Nat Nason. He was expected to work from morning to night, and such a thing as a whole day off was utterly unknown to him. He received next to nothing in the way of spending money.I'll save the money fer ye, Abner Balberry would say, when questioned on the subject. 'Tain't good fer boys to have too much cash on hand. It makes 'em reckless.

From Farm to Fortune (Illustrated) Horatio Alger,2014-08-22 Nat, where have you been? Been fishing, answered the boy addressed, a sturdy youth of sixteen, with clear blue eyes and sandy hair. Fishin'? And who said you could go fishin'? demanded Abner Balberry, in his high, nervous voice. Nobody said I could go, answered the boy, firmly. But I thought you'd all like to have some fish for supper, so I went. Humph!

From Farm to Fortune Or Nat Nason's Strange Experience Horatio Alger,2018-08-16 From Farm to Fortune or Nat Nason's Strange Experience: Large Print By Horatio Alger NAT ON THE FARM Nat, where have you been? Been fishing, answered the boy addressed, a sturdy youth of sixteen, with clear blue eyes and sandy hair. Fishin'? And who said you could go fishin'? demanded Abner Balberry, in his high, nervous voice. Nobody said I could go, answered the boy, firmly. But I thought you'd all like to have some fish for supper, so I went. Humph! I suppose you thought as how them taters would hoe themselves, eh? sneered Abner Balberry, who was not only Nat's uncle, but also his guardian. I hoed the potatoes, was the boy's answer. Got through at half-past two o'clock. If you got through so soon you didn't half do the job, grumbled the man. I ain't goin' to have you wastin' your time on no fishin', understand? Can't I go fishing at all? Not when there is work to do on this farm. But I did my work, Uncle Abner. An' I say it couldn't have been done right if ye didn't take proper time fer it, Nat Nason! I know you! You are gittin' lazy! We are delighted to publish this classic book as part of our extensive Classic Library collection.
