The Kingdom of Birds Joan Colby,2020-07-15 Joan Colby, a masterful poet and avid bird lover, takes us on a lyrical exploration inside the bird kingdom. Through her careful observances and vivid imagination, we often see ourselves-our human interactions, our social conditions, our philosophies, our celebrations, our grief. And sometimes, of course, a poem is simply about the bird. There's always one Who is preoccupied-a dreamer Contemplating the poetry of a cornfield, Gleaning the easy pickings of The left behind.

Birds Kingdom Elena Pankey,2021-02-17 This is a colorful book for children about some birds living on a California ranch. For many years the author and her dogs were observing the life of crows, hawks, owls, singing birds, trying to help all who needed their support. Some small singing birds were always courageously protecting their nests, and a Father-Bird was teaching his son to live independently. The most exciting story is about the loving parents of a young Owl, who were teaching their son to fly and got into a battle with a hawk. The author often uses the form of a fairy tale, while talking about real events. The creative book cover and unique inner design are done by the author and are masterpieces.

Wonders of the Animal Kingdom. Birds Wonders,2012-01 Purchase of this book includes free trial access to www.million-books.com where you can read more than a million books for free. This is an OCR edition with typos. Excerpt from book: THE RAVEN. Corpus. Corax. The Raven, one of the largest and most powerful of the numerous Crow family, measures two feet in length, and four feet in the stretch of the wings. The tail is finely feathered, and equal in length to half the body. The plumage of this bird, though of a sombre shade, is extremely beautiful. In particular lights, the black feathers are tinted with blue, and thus form the Raven-grey, a well known and admired colour. The bill is strong, and black, as are the feet, and it is furnished with long and vigorous wings. The Raven is an inhabitant of every known country in the world, and is able to endure the greatest extremes both of heat and cold. Like the rest of the Crow family, it possesses great acuteness of sense, and both in its wild and tame state is always prying about and taking especial notice of all that goes on around it. No sooner, says Mr. Yarrell, does an animal betray any signs of weakness but the Raven is there on the watch for an opportunity to satisfy his appetite; at first he makes his approach with great caution, because, as it has been aptly observed, though glad to find others carrion, or to make carrion of them if he can do it with impunity, he takes good care that no one shall make carrion of him. If the herdsman is absent, and no other interruption occurs, he makes his first attack upon the eye, afterwards feeds upon his victim at his leisure, retires to a small distance to digest his meal, and then returns to his feast again. The Raven inhabits high rocks on the sea-coast, extensive woods, mountains, or open plains, where danger may be seen and avoided. His food is small animals, birds and their eggs, reptiles, insects, grain, or carrion; on the sea-coast it closely searches for dead fish, or any other animal substance...
