Preparing College Teachers of Writing Betty Parsons Pytlik, Sarah Liggett, 2002 Preparing College Teachers of Writing: Histories, Theories, Programs, Practices offers essential advice to writing program administrators, teachers of methods courses and practica, and mentors of new writing faculty, as well as graduate students studying for professions in writing program administration. This extensive collection discusses the contexts, structures, development, practices, and evaluation of teaching assistant (TA) preparation programs in writing pedagogy. It features essays by thirty-five prominent experts in college composition and three former graduate students who participated in TA preparation programs. These contributors, from twenty-nine different institutions, represent decades of experience as well as significant geographic and demographic diversity. Focusing on what new college teachers need to learn about teaching writing and what types of programs best facilitate this learning, Preparing College Teachers of Writing answers these vital questions: What are the historical contexts for current TA preparation programs? What theories inform TA preparation programs? How are successful TA programs structured? and What teaching practices have proven effective in preparing TAs for college writing classrooms? The selections cover a wide range of TA preparation structures including summer orientations and theory and methods courses. Several essays address the most recent topics in the field: mentoring, reflective practices, evaluation of teaching strategies and student writing, and job preparation. The essays are optimistic and emphasize proven practices; when contributors discuss program failures, they do so to provide contexts for their programs' changes and subsequent successes. Ideal for courses in teaching college composition, Preparing College Teachers of Writing provides a uniquely comprehensive treatment of this complex topic.

Strategies for Teaching Assistant and International Teaching Assistant Development

Catherine Ross, Jane Dunphy, 2007-10-12 Written for anyone who works with graduate students to support their teaching efforts in American research universities, this book draws on the extensive experience of professional educators who represent a variety of programs throughout the United States. They understand the common constraints of many

The TA Vivica Dorn, 2019-06-07 When Michel Dubeau is pulled from the salty, oceanic grip of death by a golden, Greek god-like lifeguard, he barely has time to thank his lucky stars let alone thank the mysterious stranger who has saved him. A graduate student from Belgium who finds himself totally alone at his new American school, Kingston College, Michel tries to put the disturbing near-death experience as far from his mind as possible, knowing that it's unlikely he will ever see his hero again. That is, until he walks into the undergraduate class he has been assigned to help teach and sees the lifeguard sitting in the very front row. Sam Hendrick has always floated through life easily. Forever the joker and known for his easy-going nature, he's never found himself particularly serious about anything or anyone. Until the day he pulls a slender, shivering boy back from the brink of death. And when that very same boy turns out to be the brilliant, beautiful, demanding teaching assistant for his Politics and Governance course, he can't help but feel strangely connected to him, though they've never so much as spoken a word to each other. Beginning to struggle with the course, Sam goes to Michel with a proposition: swimming lessons in exchange for extra tutoring outside of office hours. Michel, fiercely independent and wanting to eliminate an imagined debt he has harboured ever since his rescue, reluctantly agrees. But their deal soon begins to fall apart, morphing into something else entirely, something neither of them expected. Their encounter that day at the beach has seared them irreparably, binding them together with a chain both toxic and taut, and the two students struggle to understand their strange and newfound desires. Soon enough they discover that neither of them can pull back, neither of them can escape the depths of the other, no matter how much they may try. The TA is the first book in a series about the students at Kingston College. It contains sexy swimmers, a
