Science in the Context of Application Martin Carrier,Alfred Nordmann,2010-11-12 We increasingly view the world around us as a product of science and technology. Accordingly, we have begun to appreciate that science does not take its problems only from nature and then produces technological applications, but that the very problems of scientific research themselves are generated by science and technology. Simultaneously, problems like global warming, the toxicology of nanoparticles, or the use of renewable energies are constituted by many factors that interact with great complexity. Science in the context of application is challenged to gain new understanding and control of such complexity—it cannot seek shelter in the ivory tower or simply pursue its internal quest for understanding and gradual improvement of grand theories. Science in the Context of Application will identify, explore and assess these changes. Part I considers the Changing Conditions of Scientific Research and part II Science, Values, and Society. Examples are drawn from pharmaceutical research, the information sciences, simulation modelling, nanotechnology, cancer research, the effects of commercialization, and many other fields. The book assembles papers from well-known European and American Science Studies scholars like Bernadette Bensaude-Vincent, Janet Kourany, Michael Mahoney, Margaret Morrison, Hans-Jörg Rheinberger, Arie Rip, Dan Sarewitz, Peter Weingart, and others. The individual chapters are written to address anyone who is concerned about the role of contemporary science in society, including scientists, philosophers, and policy makers.

The Flying Omnibus Paul Jensen,1953 ...A few words about the organization of this book. It is divided chronologically: Part One includes the period up to the first World War because up to that time the major effort was to fulfill the basic requirement of flight--how to get aloft. There were few subtleties to clutter the thinking of these early men. They contrived and experimented and sweated simply to accomplish that primary aim, and only by the beginning of the war could it be said that they were really successful. Part Two concerns the First-World War. It is strictly military in character because that was the main drive behind all flight during that period. Part Three is less definite. It covers the period between the two wars when aviation grew from a carnival novelty to a huge industry. Part Four is about the second World War. Section five is a collection of essays and stories that have no specific chronological setting. Each part is preceded by a short introduction which is intended to establish the factual setting for the stories that follow...--Introduction, page 4 (last three paragraphs).
