Leveling the Playing Field Lawrence P. Horowitz, Larry Ellberger, Ph. D. Jane V. Scott, 2008-12 Business development transactions are an important way for private and small cap life science companies to realize value. When negotiating transaction terms, small companies confront a playing field tilted steeply to the advantage of large companies such as Pfizer, GSK, J&J, and Medtronic. Leveling the Playing Field shows how small companies can create a level playing field and achieve a transaction that fully recognizes the value of their technologies and products. Leveling the Playing Field uses auctions as a model for successful business development. Auctions are especially effective in creating power for sellers when many, wealthy bidders compete enthusiastically to acquire a singular asset, a Rembrandt painting, a uniquely situated piece of real estate, a small company's technology or product. Leveling the Playing Field guides small companies through the process of attracting large companies, transforming their interest into enthusiasm, and maintaining a high level of competition among potential buyers for as long as possible. Leveling the Playing Field draws on the authors' experiences closing more than 100 transactions ranging in size from a few million to over $2 billion as well as their serving as senior finance, R&D, and operations executives with large and small life science companies.

Business Development Turbo-Charged Dr Earl R Smith II, Earl R. Smith, II., 2014-07-23 Why does business development never seem to fully live up to its name? Why is it so difficult to get business development working effectively for your company? Why does your BD team look like a series of revolving doors - with one person after another being hired amid great fanfare only to be let go within a year for 'non-performance'? All these consultants are peddling the same tired old solutions to a problem that never seems to go away. Why can't somebody come up with something that works? There has to be a better way!

The Good News! I've never met a CEO who was really happy with the way business development was working. They all end up saying about the same thing. "Traditional solutions fail to produce expected results while regularly generating unexpected costs. There needs to be a better way." "Why can't we get this right? It's not rocket science and we're supposed to be good at what we do. Why can't we get this damn thing right?" I remember the look of utter frustration. I had started three companies by then and knew exactly what this CEO was talking about. Business development is the major challenge of every CEO and senior team. Being in business begins with getting business. Get it right and you can win big. Get it wrong and nothing else much matters. For all my experience, I had little to suggest to my frustrated companion - it was very humbling. After we parted, my walk up First Avenue towards my home on 59th Street in Manhattan became the first steps on a decade's long quest for a solution. During my six tours as CEO I have encountered the same challenges over and over. My frustration grew until there was no way out but to find an alternative approach that really worked. Finding a way to make business development work became a crusade. I got very lucky. My fourth company showed me the way. Six months after my dismal performance in the bar I had the beginnings of a solution. Those first insights formed the core of an innovative, potent and cost-effective approach to business development. Much of the next two decades were spent developing then refining a solution to what I see as the principal point of pain for most CEOs. During that time I was guided by three goals.

- First, the solution had to be head-and-shoulders better than competing strategies.
- Second, it had to be highly cost effective - minimizing the drain on critical resources while generating maximum benefits in the form of turbo-charged business development.
- And third, it had to work!

So, here is the good news - there is a better way and this book is going to show you how to turn all those nagging questions into fading memories.

Business Development Dr Earl R Smith II, Earl R. Smith, II., 2014-06-11 More energy and effort is put into trying to figure out how to make business development work than any other management function; including advancing the technology that is at the heart of a company's value proposition. There are plenty of books out that deal with the technologies and tools of business development. This is not one of them. My focus is on the human interactions that accompany the development or expansion of a business development component of your senior management team. Over the years, I have worked with dozens of CEOs. The vast majority of them have felt more confident about their company's technology and technological edge than about its ability to generate an expanding customer base. One client put it this way, "Sure, there is always competition but the core of our management team is focused on delivering advances that keep the company's value proposition ahead of its competition." Business development is another thing altogether. Most CEOs that I have worked with have, sooner or later, had a similar experience. Their value proposition was significantly better than the competition's but they still ended up losing the business. In fact, very often the company that is best at business development is well back in the pack then it comes to innovation and cutting edge value propositions. But they win while other companies lose out to them. This is a CEO's worst nightmare. "We were better than them but we lost out." Business Development the Right Way shows you how it is done and, more importantly, that it can be done for virtually any company. Business Development the Right Way shows you how a well-run business development team coupled with an advisory board, properly structured and populated by highly influential, committed and well-connected individuals can drive a company's revenue. In this book I describe the design, population and management of these boards and show how they can increase the effectiveness of a company's business development process.

The competition for customers is getting fierce. Customers want and expect much more from company personnel. This book will help you to improve your skills in empowering people to deliver quality service excellence that will impact an increase in the 'bottom-line'. Becoming the best so to 'accelerate with impact your business and personal growth', I have set out to fulfil several objectives; * To remind Directors of some of the basic principles that you need to invest in people. * To establish a framework for the detailed review of all aspects of the employees day-to-day operations of the business, leading to the identification of problem areas and the development of action plans to improve performance and accelerate with impact the individual.*To establish guide lines and methods of planning to ensure the long - term growth and prosperity of all employees and for the company to stay in business longer because of the quality of its people. The accent throughout is on common sense and simplicity, with an avoidance of management gimmicks and minimum use of jargon. Business and general life is about dialogue that we 'all' understand and respond to. So make the playing field equal, so all people understand the language used and the action to take, to receive and accept, so business life and general life is successful for 'all' involved. Yes, you can achieve all things in life by your attitude to be positive, you have the solution in you, so go forward and use it now and be successful in your business and personal growth.
