A Single-sample Multiple-decision Procedure for Selecting the Multinomial Event which Has the Highest Probability Robert Eric Bechhofer, S. Elmaghraby, N. Morse, 1957 The problem of selecting the multinomial event which has the highest probability is formulated as a multiple-decision selection problem. Before experimentation starts the experimenter must specify two constants ($[\theta]^$, P^) which are incorporated into the requirement: The probability of a correct selection is to be equal to or greater than P^* whenever the true (but unknown) ratio of the largest to the second largest of the population probabilities is equal to or greater than $[\theta]^*$. A single-sample procedure which meets the requirement is proposed. The heart of the procedure is the proper choice of N , the number of trials. Two methods of determining N are described: the first is exact and is to be used when N is small; the second is approximate and is to be used when N is large. Tables and sample calculations are provided.
