Reducing the Complexity Costs of 401(k) Participation Through Quick Enrollment James J. Choi, David I. Laibson, Brigitte Condie Madrian, 2006 The complexity of the retirement savings decision may overwhelm employees, encouraging procrastination and reducing 401(k) enrollment rates. We study a low-cost manipulation designed to simplify the 401(k) enrollment process. Employees are given the option to make a Quick Enrollment(TM) election to enroll in their 401(k) plan at a pre-selected contribution rate and asset allocation. By decoupling the participation decision from the savings rate and asset allocation decisions, the Quick Enrollment(TM) mechanism simplifies the savings plan decision process. We find that at one company, Quick Enrollment(TM) tripled 401(k) participation rates among new employees three months after hire. When Quick Enrollment(TM) was offered to previously hired non-participating employees at two firms, participation increased by 10 to 20 percentage points among those employees affected.

Developments in the Economics of Aging David A. Wise, 2009-08-01 The number of Americans eligible to receive Social Security benefits will increase from forty-five million to nearly eighty million in the next twenty years. Retirement systems must therefore adapt to meet the demands of the largest aging population in our nation's history. In Developments in the Economics of Aging, David A. Wise and a distinguished group of analysts examine the economic issues that will confront policy makers as they seek to design policies to protect the economic and physical health of these older Americans. The volume looks at such topics as factors influencing work and retirement decisions at older ages, changes in life satisfaction associated with retirement, and the shift in responsibility for managing retirement assets from professional money managers of traditional pension plans to individual account holders of 401(k)s. Developments in the Economics of Aging also addresses the complicated relationship between health and economic status, including why health behaviors vary across populations and how socioeconomic measures correlate with health outcomes.

College Planning Using Dual Enrollment Katherine Lee, 2016-08-07 Getting into college is fairly easy. Getting out of college without going broke is the real trick! What you do in high school will determine which colleges reward you with admissions and how much non-loan aid, if any, they will offer. To get into a good college and get it paid for, you have to do the right things at the right time and in the right way. Dual enrollment is college in high school. It is the best way to prove to a college that you are deserving of university admissions and merit aid. Dual Enrollment allows any high school student to take one class to fulfill two requirements. One class for both high school and college credit. These classes are cheap or even free and are taught at a level appropriate to an average high schooler. There is simply no reason for a typical student not to take advantage of dual credit. The application process is quick, painless, and nearly fool-proof. The course placement system is fair, flexible, and accessible to every level of student with every type of learning concern. The cost is negligible when compared to the expense of attending a university after high school. And there are opportunities in nearly every community, as well as online. Just make sure to pick the right classes, at the right time, with the right teachers who can inspire and empower students to make the most of their time in dual enrollment and the results are stellar. By spending some time in dual enrollment, a pupil will gain an exposure to the expectations of college level courses, learn to optimize resources such as great teachers and free on-campus tutoring, and begin to master a post high school environment. Plus they will revel in the efficiency of taking one class for both high school and college credits. Nothing could motivate a teenager more! If you are unfamiliar with the concept of dual enrollment or dual credit for high school students, then as the Magic Mirror said to Snow White, prepare to be amazed!
