Metropolitan Atlanta's Rapid Transit System U S Government Accountability Office (G,U. S. Government Accountability Office (,2013-06 A review was made of the status of development and performance of Metropolitan Atlanta's rapid transit system and the problems being encountered. Although the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority (MARTA) has been successful in completing project milestones close to its plan, management weaknesses and trade-offs have contributed to increased costs of $50 million over the initial estimate for one segment and delays in construction because contracts were awarded before rights-of-way were acquired and the design completed. Ineffective administration of the railcar contract has resulted in late delivery of cars, with cars currently being accepted 8 months behind schedule even though MARTA continues to make progress payments as if they were on schedule. Other problems include: replacement housing costing more than originally estimated, an inadequate warranty program, and authorizations which do not include restrictions and incentives for complete development or limit Government participation in cost overruns. In some instances, more thorough Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA) review and guidance could have eliminated, or at least lessened, the management weaknesses of MARTA. However, MARTA has also demonstrated a commitment to effective management by establishing an independent internal audit function which UMTA should require other local transit authorities to adopt.

Transporting Atlanta Miriam Konrad,2010-07-02 America's worsening nightmare of gridlock is given full attention in this illuminating study of the transportation crisis in Atlanta. Inconveniences and hardships created by too many automobiles and too few alternatives for movement have reached untenable levels. Miriam Konrad investigates three major transportation projects involving public transit and use of space issues in the Atlanta area: the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority (MARTA), the bus and rail system that has been the backbone of metropolitan Atlanta's public transportation system for the past thirty years; the Georgia Regional Transportation Authority (GRTA), a superagency created in 1999 to address air quality issues in the region; and the Belt Line, a popular proposal to build a twenty-two-mile loop of greenspace, transit, and other amenities around an inner loop of the city on existing rail beds. She reveals how gridlock, over regional transportation policy and procedures, has emerged out of the competition between growth promoters, environmentalists, and social justice actors.
