Deterrence under Uncertainty: Edward Geist,2023-08-31 For decades, films such as WarGames and The Terminator have warned that the combination of artificial intelligence and nuclear weapons might be a recipe for an apocalypse. Might these prophecies of doom become reality in coming decades? Using insights from computer science, Deterrence under Uncertainty: Artificial Intelligence and Nuclear Warfare evaluates how AI could make nuclear war winnable, and whether that possibility is likely. Detailed chapters explain how the landscape of nuclear deterrence is changing and debunks the myths of machine intelligence and nuclear weapons. This book gives a practitioner's perspective on how artificial intelligence and other emerging technologies could change the role of nuclear weapons in international relations.

Russian Strategic Modernization Nikolai Sokov,2000-01-19 This unique analysis of Soviet and Russian defense affairs provides an authoritative and thoroughly documented assessment from a former Soviet foreign policy insider. As an active and informed participant, Sokov's discussion of the evolution of the Soviet and Russian strategic posture offers fascinating and illuminating firsthand insights into Soviet weapons systems, elite decisionmaking, and bureaucratic politics during both the Soviet and Russian periods. The book thus casts light not merely on the development of the Soviet ICBM and SLBM programs, but on a much broader spectrum of issues linked to Soviet and Russian security policy formulation. With its combination of informed analysis and use of new documentation, this work will be invaluable for all concerned with U.S.-Russian strategic relations.

Pedestrian Pal Bradley H. Bahls,2011 With mobile phone technology pervading people's everyday lives, using these devices has become prevalent for route recommendations while traveling in unfamiliar locations. Current research works to improve algorithms that calculate efficient and effective routes between two or more points. While expedient travel is necessary in time constraint situations, efficiency is not always required. This paper describes Pedestrian Pal, an application built for the Android mobile phone, which offers route recommendations to users based upon their desired specifications. The recommended routes are not necessarily efficient, but rather are paths based upon collected user ratings, aesthetic interests, and users' inputted parameters. During the development of this project I issued a short survey to 23 individuals to collect data to seed the system and solicit desired functionality for the application. Results of this survey confirmed most pf the design choices and were incorporated into the system. Special design choices were applied during the interface designing phase due to the limited screen real estate of the Android mobile device. Large buttons, simple menus, and familiar layouts do not overwhelm the interface and offer a seamless and intuitive user experience. Upon completion of the application development, ten users participated in testing sessions. These tests required the users to walk through eight separate tasks to examine the system's ease-of-use, fluidity of design, and intuitiveness. A follow-up interview questioned the users about the system's menu navigation, usability, and opportunities for improvement. The user tests provided encouraging feedback that affirmed the design choices as well as discovered faults in the system.
