Passive and Active Network Measurement Constantinos Dovrolis,2005-03-31
Welcome to the 6th International Workshop on Passive and Active Measurement, held in Boston, Massachusetts. PAM 2005 was organized by Boston University, with financial support from Endace Measurement Systems and Intel. PAM continues to grow and mature as a venue for research in all aspects of Internet measurement. This trend is being driven by increasing interest and activity in the field of Internet measurement. To accommodate the increasing interest in PAM, this year the workshop added a Steering Committee, whose members will rotate, to provide continuity and oversight of the PAM workshop series. PAM plays a special role in the measurement community. It emphasizes practical, relevant research in the area of network and Internet measurement. Its focus reflects the increasing understanding that measurement is critical to effective engineering of the Internet's components. This is clearly a valuable role, as evidenced by the yearly increases in the number of submissions, interest in, and attendance at PAM. PAM received 84 submissions this year. Each paper was reviewed by three or four Program Committee (PC) members during the first round. Papers that received conflicting scores were further reviewed by additional PC members or external reviewers (typically two). After all reviews were received, each paper with conflicting scores was discussed extensively by its reviewers, until a consensus was reached. The PC placed particular emphasis on selecting papers that were fresh and exciting research contributions. Also, strong preference was given to papers that included validation results based on real measurements.

First International Conference on Optical Communications and Networks (ICOON 2002) Cambyse Guy Omidyar, H. Ghafouri-Shiraz, W. D. Zhong, 2002 Optical communications networks are becoming increasingly important as there is demand for high capacity links. Dense wavelength division multiplexing (DWDM) is widely deployed at the core networks to accommodate high capacity transport systems. Optical components such as optical amplifiers, tunable filters, transceivers, termination devices and add-drop multiplexers are becoming more reliable and affordable. Access and metropolitan area networks are increasingly built with optical technologies to overcome the electronic bottleneck at network edges. New components and subsystems for very high speed optical networks offer new design options. The proceedings of the First International Conference on Optical Communications and Networks present high quality recent research results in the areas of optical communications, network components, architectures, protocols, planning, design, management and operation.

Passive and Active Network Measurement Chadi Barakat, Ian Pratt, 2004-05-11 PAM 2004 was the 5th International Workshop on Passive and Active Measurement, held in Juan-les-Pins on the French Riviera, co-organized by the University of Cambridge and INRIA-Sophia Antipolis, with financial support from Intel and Cisco Systems. This year we received a record number of submissions (184), reflecting the growth of the field and the critical role it plays in maintaining the network infrastructure on which we all rely. From the two-page abstracts submitted, the programme committee selected 29 papers whose authors were invited to submit full papers to appear in these proceedings. Particular emphasis was placed on selecting work that we felt was fresh and exciting, so as to encourage a dynamic and interactive workshop that provided a first public presentation of research that will go on to appear in other, more formal conferences and journals. The programme committee was greatly impressed with the strength and depth of submissions received, which bodes well for the future of the subject area. This workshop took place during April 19-20, 2004 in Juan-les-Pins. Located between the Alps and the Mediterranean, and close to Nice, Cannes and Monaco, Juan-les-Pins is one of the most beautiful sites on the French Riviera. Juan-les-Pins is also close to Sophia Antipolis, the French telecom valley. The workshop could not have succeeded without the support of many people whom we would like to thank. First, we thank the members of the programme committee for donating a considerable amount of time to review the unexpectedly large number of submissions, while working to a very tight deadline.
