High Speed Internet Access Using Cellular

Infrastructure Ioannis Chatziioannidis, 2004-09-01

The way that the Internet is accessed has changed dramatically in recent years. In addition to wire line connections such as dial-up, xDSL, cable modems, and optical fiber, wireless implementations are gaining market share based on technologies such as WiFi, WiMAX, MBWA, and satellite and cell phone networks. This thesis provides an overview of Internet access through cellular networks, and especially through the GSM, GPRS, and UMTS networks. Chapter 2 examines the cellular evolution, following the path from first generation (1G) to third generation (3G) and fourth generation (4G) systems. Chapter 3 analyzes the most widespread cellular networks (i.e., GSM, GPRS, UMTS) focusing on their air interface architecture, design, and modulation schemes. It also presents research on cellular data networks, such as VPN, IPv6, and VoIP. Chapter 4 reviews the most popular high-speed mobile internet services, including AT&T wireless, Cingular Wireless, Verizon Wireless, Sprint, Nextel, and T-Mobile. The Cingular Wireless network is tested in terms of speed and reliability by providing Internet access to a laptop through a mobile phone. The analysis shows that, depending on cellular network availability, throughput varied from 5 to 25 Kbps and Round Trip Time (RTT) averaged about 1 second. Also, TCP Timestamps and the Explicit Congestion Notification (ECN) were implemented at the end hosts, thus increasing performance. Chapter 5 discusses performance issues for modern cellular networks, such as RTT and some TCP options. Chapter 6 compares the cellular data Internet connection to wired connections such as dial-up and xDSL/ Cable and with wireless broadband technologies such as satellite, WiFi, WiMAX, and MBWA. The author concludes that as of July 2004, the 2.5G cellular data networks are a reasonable solution for anyone who needs Internet access anywhere that a cell signal is available, and who can afford its high cost. Design Methodologies and Tools for 5G Network Development and Application Suresh, P., Vairavel, G., Saravanakumar, U., 2020-12-25 The demand for mobile broadband will continue to increase in upcoming years, largely driven by the need to deliver ultra-high definition video. 5G is not only evolutionary, it also provides higher bandwidth and lower latency than the current-generation technology. More importantly, 5G is revolutionary in that it is expected to enable fundamentally new applications with much more stringent requirements in latency and bandwidth. 5G should help solve the last-mile/last-kilometer problem and provide broadband access to the next billion users on earth at a much lower cost because of its use of new spectrum and its improvements in spectral efficiency. 5G wireless access networks will need to combine several innovative aspects of decentralized and centralized allocation looking to maximize performance and minimize signaling load. Research is currently conducted to understand the inspirations, requirements, and the promising technical options to boost and enrich activities in 5G. Design Methodologies and Tools for 5G Network Development and Application presents the enhancement methods of 5G communication, explores the methods for faster communication, and provides a promising alternative solution that equips designers with the capability to produce high performance, scalable, and adoptable communication protocol. This book provides complete design methodologies, supporting tools for 5G communication, and innovative works. The design and evaluation of different proposed 5G structures signal integrity, reliability, low-power techniques, application mapping, testing, and future trends. This book is ideal for researchers who are working in communication, networks, design and implementations, industry personnel, engineers, practitioners, academicians, and students who are interested in the evolution, importance, usage, and technology adoption for 5G applications.
