Spell-Checker Follies Joseph D. Keefer, Ph.d., 2017-03-11 There are hundreds of instances in which two or more words are pronounced alike but are spelled differently--for example, role and roll. In addition, there are hundreds of instances in which two words are pronounced differently but do exhibit some similarity in appearance--for example, compel and impel. Even well-educated people occasionally commit what can be called a word-choice blunder--that is, mixing up sound-alike words or similar-looking words. Those blunders can undermine your professional credibility and can embarrass you in social settings. Knowing the right word by heart is important. When you compose text on a computer, you cannot depend on a spell-check program to catch mistakes related to sound-alike or similar-looking words. When you forgo a spell-checker or when you hand-write a note, you are on your own. And, when you speak, you are on your own, too, because you need to know the distinctions between similar-sounding words. The book Spell-Checker Follies provides guidance on the correct usage of 435 pairs of words--182 sound-alike pairs and 253 similar-looking pairs. Spell-Checker Follies is designed to be read cover-to-cover and studied, much like a textbook. The book is divided into 16 units, each four pages long, with the most-common word pairs being addressed in the early units. An index lists the word pairs alphabetically.
