The Boy Aviators' Polar Dash John Henry Goldfrap,2020-03-15 As Harry Chester had said, the wharf was a muss. Everywhere were cases and barrels all stenciled Ship Southern Cross, U. S. South Polar Expedition. As fast as a gang of stevedores, their laboring bodies steaming in the sharp air, could handle the muddle, the numerous cases and crates were hauled aboard the vessel we have noticed and lowered into her capacious holds by a rattling, fussy cargo winch. The shouts of the freight handlers and the sharp shrieks of the whistle of the boss stevedore, as he started or stopped the hoisting engine, all combined to form a picture as confused as could well be imagined, and yet one which was in reality merely an orderly loading of a ship of whose existence, much less her destination, few were aware

The Boy Aviators' Polar Dash; Or, Facing Death in the Antarctic John Henry Goldfrap,2014-07-19 Oh, it's southward ho, where the breezes blow; we're off for the pole, yo, ho! heave ho! Is that you, Harry? asked a lad of about seventeen, without looking up from some curious-looking frames and apparatus over which he was working in the garage workshop back of his New York home on Madison Avenue. Ay! ay! my hearty, responded his brother, giving his trousers a nautical hitch; you seem to have forgotten that to-day is the day we are to see the polar ship. Not likely, exclaimed Frank Chester, flinging down his wrench and passing his hand through a mop of curly hair; what time is it? Almost noon; we must be at the Eric Basin at two o'clock. As late as that? Well, building a motor sledge and fixing up the Golden Eagle certainly occupies time. Come on; wash up and then we'll get dinner and start over. Will Captain Hazzard be there?
