The Boy Aviators' Treasure Quest John Henry Goldfrap,2016-04-01 They may be young, but the heroes of John Henry Goldfrap's popular Boy Aviators series for younger readers make up for what they lack in experience with plenty of grit, gusto and gumption. In this, the fourth installment of the series, the boys find themselves on quest to find a massive store of treasure in the Sargasso Sea.

The Boy Aviators' Treasure Quest John Henry Goldfrap,2014-11-11 [...] The old fox, -I wonder if he recognized us? cried Harry. If his eyes are as keen as they used to be, he did, without a question, rejoined Frank. The boy was right. Old Barr had recognized them, and knew them all the more readily indeed for the reason that at that very moment his mind was bent on frustrating a plan that Sanborn had informed him the boys had in mind, and which they were on their way to culminate. I'll bet, if he knew what we are on our way to talk over, he'd give a few dollars to be present at the conversation, remarked Billy. You may well say that, laughed Frank, anything that there seems to be a dollar in, is old Luther Barr's highest ideal. By this time they had passed through the village and, after walking about half a mile down a country road, they emerged on a green, park-like meadow, at the further side of which stood a neat cottage. Portions of a whale's huge bones dotted either side of the path as ornaments, and in front of the cottage stood a flagpole from which fluttered the Stars and Stripes. The cottage was painted white and was as neat and ship-shape as the quarterdeck of a man-of-war. As they walked up the path the door opened and a grizzled face, set in a perfect forest of white whiskers, protruded itself with a smile of welcome. Hello, boys-welcome to my cuddy, cried Blue-water Bill's hearty voice. I've a fine dish of lobscouse, a raisin pie and some cider from Farmer Goggins's press all ready for you. Come in-come in. He ushered them into a small sitting-room, furnished with all sorts of sea curiosities, and, after explaining several of the curios to the boys, he announced, [...].

The Boy Aviators' Treasure Quest; Or, the Golden Galleon John Henry Goldfrap,2014-07-19 Hurrah! The shout went upward in a swelling volume of sound as a thousand voices took up the cry. Say, those boys can fly! I should say so. Did you see that swoop! Did I? I thought they were goners sure. They handle that sky-clipper like a bicycle. These admiring exclamations came in a perfect hailstorm as the big biplane air-craft, which had called them forth, swept earthward, bearing her two young occupants downward in a long graceful glide, and landing them at the door of their red aerodrome with the precision of an automobile being driven up to its owner's front steps. The drone of the engine ceased and little spurts of dust shot up from the landing wheels as the young aviator at the helm of the beautiful craft applied his brakes, threw out the spark and cut off the engine. The plane ran about one hundred feet on its wheels and then came to a standstill. Hurrah for the Golden Eagle! shouted a voice. The enthusiasm was echoed all over the crowded field. From the long rows of autos, parked at the edge of the field and crowded with applauding men and women, came the honk! honk! of horns in a deafening clamor.
