Field Test Results of a Laser Doppler Velocimeter and an Acoustic Doppler Wind Sounder Frederick J. Brousaides,1978 A field test program was conducted to evaluate the potential of two indirect wind sensing techniques as possible support in a warm fog dispersal system. The sensors examined were a Laser Doppler Velocimeter and an Acoustic Doppler Wind Sounder. Data from these devices were correlated with measurements taken by anemometers mounted upon a 61-m meteorological tower. The average deviation of the Laser Doppler Velocimeter was + or - 1.0 m/sec in wind speed and + or - 7 deg in azimuth. Five-minute averaging periods were taken and four to six altitudes were scanned during each run. The average deviation of the Acoustic Doppler Wind Sounder for 5-min averages was + or - 0.9 m/sec in wind speed and + or - 13 deg in azimuth. In one protracted run using 10-min averages, the deviations were + or - 0.6 m/sec in wind speed and + or - 6 deg in azimuth.

By limiting ourselves to the employment of hot wires of 0.05 mm (0.002 in.) diameter, we obtained instruments which faithfully followed all the wind fluctuations of over 0.1 second and even much more rapid variations without any very great error.
