Stations of the Cross W. Allen Ashby,2012-03-01 Stations of the Cross is a series of 14 poems written deliberately at the rate of one poem a year, over 14 years from 1973 to 1986. They are an on going annual conversation with a friend who took his own life in October of 1974, and while many of the details in the poems are personal, the poems are not meant to be autobiographical. In many ways they resemble a conversation we might have with a good friend if we could only meet over dinner once every year for two hours. The poems, of course, are meant to stand on their own individually, but they also trace, over time, a process of living through grief and loss, but even deeper than that, they are meant to serve as an affirmation of life and friendship that extends beyond death. They were for me, as I hope they are for you, an (annual) experience of grace.

Stonehenge W. Allen Ashby,2012-03-01 Stonehenge is a Phenomenology of the Imagination. It seeks to explore and elucidate 12 separate aspects of the imagination as it interacts with us in our daily lives. Specifically it looks at the imagination's role as: the source of our deepest personal experiences, the creator of our memories, as the agent of our confusion, as a trickster, an aspect of the erotic, and as the origin of nothing. It also examines the role of the imagination as the creator of our rituals, perceptions and judgment, as a destroyer, the ground of our being, an actor, and finally, as a way of life. Each of the 12 chapters is centered in images which are often taken from literature, and of course the title itself is taken from a place of the earth that is still a mystery, from a field of broken and fallen stones in the Salisbury plain in England. The aim of the philosophical effort here is to walk around the imagination as one can walk around the circle of those stones, keeping the mystery alive inside.

A Comprehensive History of Western Ethics Warren Ashby,W. Allen Ashby,1997 Ashby includes the great thinkers and periods that have shaped Western ethics: the Greeks, the Hebrew prophets, the Roman Stoics, St. Augustine, the medieval ethicists, the Renaissance and Reformation, the Enlightenment, the Romantics, and the radical revolutions of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. In the period from 1850 to 1920, Ashby notes, the transformations wrought by the four great modern thinkers - Darwim, Marx, Nietzsche, and Freud - both extended and significantly challenged the traditional core beliefs of the West and, as a result, bestowed upon us a profound moral crisis, one that we have not yet successfully met. Consequently, as we stand at the brink of the twenty-first century, with its further technological breakthroughs and social upheavals, how will we deal with the moral uncertainties that await us? In his final chapter Ashby contends that while remaining alive to our Western ethical heritage, we will have no choice but to confront its basic presuppositions as we move into a more pluralistic society, for he asserts that the ideology of the future cannot be exclusively Western; future history cannot be purely Western history. So, while this history of ethics cannot tell us how to live, it can offer to the reader what is prerequisite to a more satisfying life: an insightful and inclusive history of where our own ethical beliefs have come from and a sense of the challenges that await us all..

Starting Over W. Allen Ashby,2012-03-01 Starting Over is a series of travel pieces centered in a 15 month backpacking sabbatical the author took, traveling around the world. It attempts to give a personal sense of each of the 15 countries, its people and culture, and the author's experiences there. Each chapter is also stylistically different. New chapters have been added for other countries, and a final concluding chapter has been written attempting to make sense of what the author learned about himself from traveling for an extensive period of time. The writing is meant to be fun, informative, entertaining, and thought-provoking.

Translations W. Allen Ashby,2012-03-01 Translations is an affirmative poetic history of America, spanning the years from our prehistory to the present. The ten sets of poems are arranged in pairs which are meant to both complement, contrast, and complete each other as American history often has. But over all they are meant to capture the beauty, the complexity and the vibrancy of the American spirit.
