Goldsborough Mayor, 2013-12 Unlike some other reproductions of classic texts (1) We have not used OCR (Optical Character typos. (2) In books where there are images such as portraits, maps, sketches etc We have endeavoured to keep the quality of these images, so they represent accurately the original artefact.

Although occasionally there may be certain imperfections with these old texts, we feel they deserve to be made available for future generations to enjoy.

Ctenophores of the Atlantic Coast of North America (Classic Reprint) Alfred Goldsborough Mayer, 2015-07-20 Excerpt from Ctenophores of the Atlantic Coast of North America This research was begun in 1892 at the suggestion of Prof. Alexander Agassiz, while I was a student in his excellently equipped marine laboratory at Newport, Rhode Island. Until 1900 Professor Agassiz did all in his power to encourage these studies, and I now publish the final results in the hope that by so doing I may present them as a tribute of respect and gratitude to the memory of Alexander Agassiz to whose generous aid and unselfish interest so many young men have owed their impetus toward research in science. It is a pleasure to express my appreciation of the kindness of the Honorable Mr. A. W. Piccott, Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Newfoundland, who cordially extended toward me every personal and official courtesy while I was engaged in the study of the ctenophores of the Newfoundland coast in September, 1910. During the past seven years at the Tortugas Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington it has been my custom to go out upon the ocean during periods of tropical calm, when the surface is unrippled, and to dip up the Ctenophores in glass vessels and transfer them to the laboratory for study. All but three of the species of Ctenophorae described from American North Atlantic waters have come under my observation, and descriptions of these three, Lesueria hyboptera, Ocyropsis maculata, and Tjalfiella tristoma are introduced in order to present an account of all ctenophorae known from the Atlantic coast of North America. Studies on Two Aberrant Ctenophores, Coeloplana and Gastrodes (Classic Reprint) Taku Komai, 2015-08-05 Excerpt from Studies on Two Aberrant Ctenophores, Coeloplana and Gastrodes Although Abbott's works on Coeloplana which appeared in 1902 and 1907 shed a great deal of light on the structure of that interesting animal, yet much has remained to be elucidated, especially as regards its development. In fact, the embryology of the animal has never been studied. As a consequence, there still exists a difference of opinion among authors with respect to the systematic position to be assigned to the animal, some of them regarding it as a transitional form in the stages of evolution from the Ctenophora to the Turbellaria, while others believe its striking resemblance to the latter group to be nothing more than an instance of convergent adaptation. In 1916 I took up the study of Coeloplana with the intention of verifying the accounts given by Abbott and to fill up, if possible, some of the gaps in our knowledge of the animal. Fortunately enough, a fairly plentiful supply of material for my use could be obtained at Misaki. This enabled me to realize my intention in a measure. Especially a fortunate circumstance was that material was securable on which to undertake a study of the development. Some of the results of my researches have already been given in a preliminary report published in 1920 (a). The present paper embodies a fuller account of the results in regard to the anatomy and development of the animal. During the whole course of the study, I was quite unaware of that Krempf also had been engaged in the same research. But, when I saw his work published, I was glad to find that, there was no great discord between our studies, at least as far as important points are concerned. I have been able to refer to his results in the present work, and as to the points of disagreement, I have dealt with them somewhat in detail. The facts about Gastrodes given in the second part of this paper are, so to speak, by-products of the research in Coeloplana. While consulting literature necessary for that work, my attention was attracted to the existence of another peculiar form called Gastrodes which had been referred to the Ctenophora with some doubt, and in the hope of making out the nature of that animal, I was waiting for the opportunity of studying it.
