A Case Study in Mobile Application Development for Student Advisement in the W. P. Carey School of Business Todd Clement, 2014-05-14 Master's Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject Computer Science - Internet, New Technologies, grade: sehr gut, Arizona State University, course: Graphic Information Technology, language: English, abstract: This research explored the current state of mobile application development with the purpose of creating an implementation for the W. P. Carey School of Business' advising services online system (Advising S.O.S.) application. A functional overview of the desktop application was explored along with its usage and purpose, followed by a survey of current mobile application development strategies. The Advising S.O.S. application was a strong candidate for this research, as it is an application that students use every day for a variety of tasks. Data for this study was acquired from numerous sources including Google Analytics, input from the W. P. Carey Advisor Technical Committee, interviews, a student survey instrument, and development best practices. The outcome of this study indicates that mobile application development can be successful for institutes of higher education within the confines of budgets, timelines, and current knowledge and expertise. Both the advising staff and students were very satisfied with the new application. Valuable traffic data was captured and analyzed to inform future efforts in mobile application development for the school. Several key criteria were identified that can inform any mobile application development strategy. Additionally, an overview of the current state of mobile application development and strategies are contained herein.

Global Monitoring Report 2014/2015 World Bank;International Monetary Fund,2014-10-21 The Global Monitoring Report 2014/2015: Ending Poverty and Sharing Prosperity was written jointly by the World Bank Group (WBG) and the International Monetary Fund, with substantive inputs from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. This year's report details, for the first time, progress toward the WBG's twin goals of ending extreme poverty by 2030 and promoting shared prosperity and assesses the state of policies and institutions that are important for achieving them. The report continues to monitor progress on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Also for the first time, the report includes information about high-income countries. It finds that while gaps in living standards have been closing in many countries, the well-being of households in the bottom 40 percent, as measured by the non-income MDGs such as access to education and health services, remains below that of households in the top 60 percent. The focus of this year's report is on three elements needed to make growth more inclusive and sustainable: investment in human capital that favors the poor, the best use of safety nets, and steps to ensure the environmental sustainability of economic growth. These three elements are imperative to all countries' development strategies, and are also fundamental to global efforts to achieve the twin goals, the MDGs, and the Sustainable Development Goals that will succeed the MDGs. Global Monitoring Report 2014/2015 was prepared in collaboration with regional development banks and other multilateral partners.
