Efficient Transient Noise Analysis in Circuit Simulation

Thorsten Sickenberger, 2008-07-15 The current technological progress in microelectronics is driven by the desire to decrease feature sizes, increase frequencies and the need for low supply voltages. Amongst other effects the signal-to-noise ratio decreases and the transient noise analysis becomes necessary in the simulation of electronic circuits. Taking the inner electronic noise into account by means of Gaussian white noise currents, mathematical modelling leads to stochastic differential algebraic equations (SDAEs) with a large number of small noise sources. The simulation of such systems requires an efficient numerical time integration by mean-square convergent numerical methods. In this thesis, adaptive linear multi-step Maruyama schemes to solve stochastic differential equations (SDEs) and SDAEs are developed. A reliable local error estimate for systems with small noise is provided and a strategy for controlling the step-size and the number of solution paths simultaneously in one approximation is presented. Numerical experiments on industrial relevant real-life applications illustrate the theoretical findings.

What is the value of Kathmandu Holdings Ltd.?

Ariane Holz, 2019-06-24 Seminar paper from the year 2018 in the subject Business economics - Operations Research, grade: 2,0, University of Auckland (Graduate School of Management), course: BUSMGT 733: Analysing Financial Statements, language: English, abstract: Determining the value of a company is a complex procedure which cannot be automated by any algorithm. This report investigated the intrinsic value and the relative value of Kathmandu Holdings Ltd., a New Zealand based company operating in the retail speciality industry. The valuation was based on the discounted cash flow model (DCF model) and a market multiple analysis. In this light, this report used assumptions such as future growth rate, EBIT growth, working capital, PPE and intangible asset turnover, all of which were largely affected by micro- and macroeconomic factors. Based on our calculation of a value per share of $2.72 using the DCF model, Kathmandu has been slightly over-priced in 2018 (+13 per cent). This result was supported by the current share price of Kathmandu of $2.50 as of 1 March 2019. The selection of the company used for the market multiple analysis was based on the industry, comparable size, leverage, profitability and growth potential. Due to the size of the New Zealand economy and the nature of the Kathmandu business, the options to choose from were limited. We compared Kathmandu to The Super Retail Group, a retailer of automotive, outdoor equipment and clothing, operating in Australia, New Zealand and China. The NOA multiple of 2.74 suggested that Kathmandu was slightly over-priced, which was in line with our findings from the DCF model. Kathmandu Holdings Ltd. is a New Zealand based company operating in the retail specialty industry. It offers a range of apparel as well as travel and camping equipment and is a leading retailer in Australasia. As at 31 July 2018, Kathmandu operates 167 retail stores across New Zealand, Australia, and the UK. In addition, the premium outdoor brand is operating through online channels, currently predominantly targeting the US. The main competitors of Kathmandu within the specialty retail industry include outdoor stores for fishing and camping, and big retailers, such as Macpac, Icebreaker or Torpedo 7, which are all vying for similar segments in the market. Due to the low start-up costs, the industry is also facing fierce competitions from online-only stores, where customers can shop around the clock from the comfort of their homes.
