When Religion Meets New Media Heidi Campbell, 2010-04-05 This lively book focuses on how different Jewish, Muslim, and Christian communities engage with new media. Rather than simply reject or accept new media, religious communities negotiate complex relationships with these technologies in light of their history and beliefs. Heidi Campbell suggests a method for studying these processes she calls the religious-social shaping of technology and students are asked to consider four key areas: religious tradition and history; contemporary community values and priorities; negotiation and innovating technology in light of the community; communal discourses applied to justify use. A wealth of examples such as the Christian e-vangelism movement, Modern Islamic discourses about computers and the rise of the Jewish kosher cell phone, demonstrate the dominant strategies which emerge for religious media users, as well as the unique motivations that guide specific groups.

Barcelona Street Art Khaled Sayed,2015-05-30 Barcelona Street Art is a photo essay about the fascinating street art culture I encountered on my trip to Barcelona, Spain in late 2014. The creative use of street art (graffiti) was inspiring. Shop owners lend their shop doors for street artist to use as canvases. In the old neighbourhood of Barcelona most of the streets are very narrow, and shops are lined up closely, sometimes on both sides of the street. The distinctive graffiti sometimes serve as the best way to navigate these winding little alleys. The graffiti expressed many artistic styles, from realism to abstract. The topics of the graffiti varied widely. Some were political, others were funny or superstitious, and most were stunning and original displays of color and shape.
