Does Buffer Zone Buffering? Prakash Basnet, 2010-12 The study found that community livelihood has dependent on the traditional subsistence agriculture and use of forest resource. Dependency on the natural resource was found to be high and use of alternative source of energy is low which had adverse impact on the forest. Bufferzone programme appears to not to decrease need pressure. Distributions of Bufferzone forest resources were found to be unequal among the households. Information on 70 household was gathered to tie up with vegetation study. For the tree species 12 sample plots, 24 plots for shrubs and herbs were studied. Of these 2 tree species, 22 shrubs and 20 herbs were studied. Density, species diversity, IVI, basal area, volume, biomass and annual yield of plant were low. Regeneration of plant species was low because anthropogenic pressure on forest of Bufferzone found to be high.

Bufferzone to Buffer Protected Area Asha Suwal, 2011-09 Benefit sharing to the local community in buffer zone (BZ), one of The World Conservation Union (IUCN) Protected Area Categories, could be an effective tool in bringing local people to the mainstream of biodiversity conservation. However, low level of awareness towards conservation which is second priority of the local dwellers in lack of alternate economic opportunities induces park-people conflict issues undermining conservation goal especially in the developing countries like Nepal. The detailed ground information about the complex interaction of socioeconomic structure and natural resource use in the area recognizing main stakeholders is a basic step necessary to carry out before BZ delineation. For the same, this research conducted in middle mountain National Park in Nepal, emphasizes on socioeconomic dynamism and its linkage and/or dependency to natural resource. It is aimed to identify the concerned groups, major stakeholders and areas that should be considered particularly. This book is useful for multidisciplinary bodies such as economists, administrators, social working groups, policy makers, conservationists and researchers.

Buffer Zone Connie Suttle, 2018-04-28 A full moon hung over the Mississippi's dark waters, meaning this was the time for hunters to arrive and take whatever they could capture. A device would be clamped to the backs of our necks and we'd never be able to shift back to human again. It was how they justified their enslavement of us; that we were only animals instead of sentient humans. The Krelk had killed more than two-thirds of the human population, too, but they made the excuse that they'd thought them animal as well, until their High Council, wherever that was, decided otherwise. When I heard the first yelp, even underground, I couldn't breathe. Was that a shifter? Few shifters could take on a Krelk and their weapons and either survive or avoid being stunned. That's how we were captured—frozen and only barely able to breathe while we were caged, tagged and hauled away from the buffer zone. Another yelp—followed quickly by a third. This was no shifter—the Krelk were the ones screaming. Terrified but still curious, I dipped into the watery entrance and slowly made my way out of my cave to peek at the river bank above my head. A dead Krelk dropped into the water nearby, making me jump and squeak in terror. An otter? Someone leaned down to look at me. Not a Krelk—I knew their scent. This—I'd never scented someone like this before. I scrambled backward, afraid of this newcomer, too, even if he did appear humanoid. Don't be afraid—I killed all of them. I backed all the way into the water and scrambled to swim to my cave before he could grab me. Once there, I refused to come out. I understand, he said, loud enough that I could still hear him. Be safe. I'll patrol farther down, tonight. I listened, my heart beating so rapidly I feared it would burst while his footsteps, light as they were, faded as he walked southward. He'd killed six Krelk, and I'd never heard one of their weapons fire. Who could do that?

Spatial Ecology via Reaction-Diffusion Equations Robert Stephen Cantrell, Chris Cosner, 2004-01-09 Many ecological phenomena may be modelled using apparently random processes involving space (and possibly time). Such phenomena are classified as spatial in their nature and include all aspects of pollution. This book addresses the problem of modelling spatial effects in ecology and population dynamics using reaction-diffusion models. * Rapidly expanding area of research for biologists and applied mathematicians * Provides a unified and coherent account of methods developed to study spatial ecology via reaction-diffusion models * Provides the reader with the tools needed to construct and interpret models * Offers specific applications of both the models and the methods * Authors have played a dominant role in the field for years Essential reading for graduate students and researchers working with spatial modelling from mathematics, statistics, ecology, geography and biology.
