The Cyberlink (trademark) Interface: Development of a Hands-Free Continuous/Discrete Multi-Channel Computer Input Device ,1999 The Cyberlink is an alternative controller that employs electromyographic, electrooculographic and electroencephalographic signals measured at the operator's forehead. The Phase I SBIR developed a pre-production prototype and demonstrated that operators are able to use it for continuous (point) and discrete (click) computer control with promising efficiency and accuracy. The Phase II effort transitions this technology to a mature system that is available commercially. A dry electrode/headband system was developed for signal acquisition. A low noise bioamplifier and micro-controller performs signal conditioning and initial processing. Windows 3.1 and 95 drivers were developed to permit the Cyberlink to interface with third-party software. A suite of calibration, training and adjustment utilities also operate under Windows. The final evaluation compared the Cyberlink and a standard mouse in a two-axis target acquisition task that employed a Fitts' Law paradigm. Both mouse and Cyberlink performance could be modeled with Fitts' Law, although the mouse was about four times faster. This is an encouraging result, given the subjects much greater experience with a mouse. The Cyberlink is currently being employed as an assertive and therapeutic technology. Its rapid discrete input capability is being explored for several Air Force applications that would benefit from hands-free control.

Global Taiwan Suzanne Berger,Richard K. Lester,2015-02-12 Global Taiwan examines the impact of globalization on the industry and economy of Taiwan since the spectacular growth of the 1990s. Drawing on hundreds of interviews with firms in Taiwan, China, the United States, Japan, Europe, and other areas, the book analyzes the strengths and weaknesses of Taiwanese firms at a time when they face new competition from powerful global leaders and new producers in China. The contributors cover topics of enormous importance for Taiwan as well as the rest of the world, including transformations in the international economy, technological advances that enabled modularization and fragmentation of the production system, contract manufacturers, regionalization, and links with Chinese industry. The book addresses such questions as: Can Taiwanese companies be maintained and expanded with the same corporate strategies and public policies as in the past? Can these strategies still work for other countries? If changes are required, what resources can be mobilized in the public and private sectors? As massive relocation of manufacturing and services moves plants and jobs to low-wage countries like China and India, what will remain at home in societies like Taiwan?

Computer Recreation for Everyone Eamon Patrick Doherty, Ph.D.,2005-02-21 This book describes the history of video games and shows their evolution to the present. We survey a variety of common vintage Atari and Coleco games that can be used as part of a computer recreation plan for the disabled, senior citizens, and anyone else who wants to have fun. We also discuss some developments resulting from some computer games that were operated with electrodes for people with persistent vegetative state, spinal chord injured, and comatose. There are also some fascinating computer simulations used with doctors to help people recover from fear of driving, fear of height, and to distract them from pain experienced from severe burns. We also survey recreational/communication games in the Middle East.
