I Hope They Serve Beer In Hell Tucker Max, 2012-03-01 The “highly entertaining and thoroughly reprehensible” #1 New York Times bestseller—now with sixteen pages of photos and a new introduction (The New York Times). My name is Tucker Max, and I am an asshole. I get excessively drunk at inappropriate times, disregard social norms, indulge every whim, ignore the consequences of my actions, mock idiots and posers, sleep with more women than is safe or reasonable, and just generally act like a raging dickhead. But, I do contribute to humanity in one very important way: I share my adventures with the world. --from the Introduction Actual reader feedback: I find it truly appalling that there are people in the world like you. You are a disgusting, vile, repulsive, repugnant, foul creature. Because of you, I don't believe in God anymore. No just God would allow someone like you to exist. I'll stay with God as my lord, but you are my savior. I just finished reading your brilliant stories, and I laughed so hard I almost vomited. I want to bring that kind of joy to people. You're an artist of the highest order and a true humanitarian to boot. I'm in both shock and awe at how much I want to be you.

Free Is Bad John Marshall, 2020-10-14 Free Is Bad Almost everything we consume online is free. Email, search, news, entertainment. But those apps on our phones aren't really free-so if we're not paying, who is? The surveillance marketing industry is. We give them our personal data and let them chase us around the web with ads. In exchange we get cat memes, news and constant updates from our friends. It doesn't have to be this way. Web pioneers tried to build a system where consumers paid creators. Early developers desperately tried to build businesses that ran on sales. Believe it or not, Google's founders were dead set against advertising-for fear it would compromise the quality of their own search results. Yet here we are. Why? Because of the misguided belief that, Information wants to be free, which is codified deep in our behavior. It started way back in the early days of the republic, evolved with newspapers, radio and broadcast TV, and persists today online. In Free Is Bad, digital marketing entrepreneur John Marshall explores the web industry's early history and its search for viable business models. It's an investigation of how an evolutionary accident in the design of the web resulted in the ad-tech industry, enabling free as the default model for technology products like search and email, and for media products like news and entertainment. He examines how this made us into the product being bought and sold in the marketplace, and why that hurts the quality of our information and discourse. And he offers a hopeful overview of how the web is slowly clawing its way back to respectability through new, people-first business models. Free Is Bad also serves as a guide to how, in the meantime, we can modify our behavior online right now, to better protect ourselves and our privacy. It reimagines our relationship with quality online services, media, and information: A relationship that makes us the customer, not the product. It's not codified in the conviction that, Information wants to be free. It's rooted in a new belief. The belief that Free Is Bad.
