Lady Login's Recollections Edith Dalhousie Login, 2015-07-15 Excerpt from Lady Login's Recollections: Court Life and Camp Life, 1820-1904 Although few of those who saw her in her later years could fail to recognise in her a strong personality, a wonderfully clear judgement and a keen insight into character, coupled with immense force of will and vitality, I doubt if the majority of her acquaintances realised the strangely varied scenes through which my mother had passed in the course of a long life, and how closely, on occasion, she had been brought into contact with the men and women who made the history of the nineteenth century. She was not one to speak of these things in general society, and knew, as do the wives of most Indian officials, how to keep her own counsel, and that of those who trusted her with their confidence. And often she was slow to realise that what, at the time, appeared to her just a natural condition of affairs, could possibly present itself to the mind of a younger generation as entirely incredible and marvellous!
